Two Loves

ALVAN McFEE pressed his fingers against his forehead as if to remove the nervous, burning desire. He crossed the lighted doorway, returned, crossed again.

Most of the crowd would be in the gaming room, heading over to the green baize tables, faces tense under the white glare of hanging lamps. Now the croupier would clear the board, shove a stack of yellow chips to the winner! McFEE set his jaw in grim determination. The action made him seem more ruggedly handsome than ever. But the lighted doorway drew him as a magnet draws metal. He was born to gamble.

Janet Marlowe had said as she lay back on the warm brown drapings of the lounge, a colorful pillow under her arm: "You're not a boy, any more, Al."

"It just seems to be in my blood, Jay," he had answered, cheerfully, helping himself to one of her cigarettes. "If you figure it from a business standpoint, I'm doing all right. I break even."

"Are you counting all your losses?" she had asked curiously. "Certainly, why?"

She straightened and suddenly her smiling face became grave. "Al, you're gambling my love!"

"Oh, come, Jay," he had remonstrated, "you know it isn't as serious as that!"

Then she had laughed, had told him she joked and sent him on. But he had never seen her more earnest than at that moment. It was this which had kept him from entering the casino. The burning desire for the tables kept him from leaving it altogether. At last he won't up the steps.

"Good evening, Mr. McFEE," said a voice at his side, followed by a tantalizing laugh, and he turned to find Janet Marlowe.

"Oh," There was a moment of awkward silence. "I hardly expected you after—" he hesitated. "The lecture? I wanted to understand the attraction." She was looking at him intently.

"Will you sit aside for a while?" he asked uncomfortably, feeling instinctively that he didn't want her to play. It wouldn't do for Janet Marlowe to get the fever and those lines of despair. She wasn't like him, born to gamble. It wouldn't affect him. Wasn't all life a gamble anyway?

"Didn't you come to play?" she asked softly. "Yes," he said bluntly. "May I watch?" "Of course."

He looked at her face as they moved toward the players. She slipped her arm familiarly in the crook of his elbow, but her glance was veiled, full of hidden meaning. Then they were at the table. He saw a bill for chips and leaned over following the leading dice with practiced glance. He did not play immediately. Neither did he notice when she left but as he finally placed a bet he looked over the table and saw her on the far side, smiling inscrutably.

The dice leaped and leaped again. The croupier drew in the winnings, paid a man at the table's end. He smiled again and the familiar lines worn by former losers slipped across his face.

McFEE let a play go by. Janet was still watching. Then he pushed a bet across.

"Five to win," he said hoarsely. "I'll gamble my love," said a laughing voice at the end of the table.

He whirled as if he had been struck. A dark-haired, gypsy-like girl was laughing up at her escort. "Even if you lose, darling," he was saying, "I win."

McFEE's mind seemed whirling. He forgot the dice, did not watch them go into the cup. These young people did not have the mark of the gamblers. They would get it. Now the girl playfully claimed she would gamble her love. But what of the time when he gambled her love?

McFEE looked across to the place Janet had occupied, but a stout woman with a vulgar garb of diamonds was there. He glanced over the room, saw Janet hurrying toward the door, a flash of a handkerchief hastily dabbing her eyes. "Janet!" he called. People turned, but she hurried on. "Five!" called the croupier. "Gentleman wins on five."

But Alvan McFEE was already halfway to the door. He caught her as she hurried along the outer walk, silently tucked her arm beneath his. "My darling," he said softly, "I have only one love now."

She hid her face, sobbing softly. "I was afraid—afraid you'd never know there were two."

Heraldry

England is the only country in the world where heraldry is recognized. The Herald's college, although long since without authority to enforce its rulings, records pedigrees and registers those who have a hereditary claim to arms.

Mirabelle, Tiny Plum
Mirabelle is a species of tiny plum grown in France. It is used for jam, tarts and mirabelle liqueur.

Band Stand Location

To the Editor,
Often a lack of intelligent interest in the public affairs of a community, on the part of its citizens, results in serious blunders by its officials. Frankly, these mistakes in judgment cannot be charged entirely against the officials, but in reality are the responsibility of the entire body of citizens. Each one of us has the privilege and should contribute to civic progress.

So that as it may, such a blunder is now in process of consummation. I am referring to the location in which the new band stand is being built.

Last summer when the subject of relocating the band stand was discussed, I wrote made the suggestion in your columns that it be placed in the City Park, located in the valley north of the school. A number of factors entered into the survey the writer made previous to making the suggestion, such as increased accommodation for parking cars, greater safety potential seating capacity for pedestrians, and the development of the park facilities for community purposes. How many suggestions have been made by others I do not know.

However, without suggestions from anyone, the committee of the City Commission in charge of the project should have been able to avoid the colossal blunder of placing the stand approximately 30 feet back of, and facing, the backstop of the baseball field. This provides ample for the parking of cars, but no safe place for a pedestrian to walk except outside of the parking space, and no place at all to sit down without cars being between him and the stand. Apparently in order that no car should have to park more than 125 feet from the stand, it is being placed, so that the nearest possible safe seating place for pedestrians is about 250 feet or more from it—and that with parking space between.

Locating it thus is not necessary nor even sensible. There is space near the footbridge on which it could be located in such a way that it would accommodate both groups of listeners equitably and with the safety factor enhanced many times.

It is hoped that by properly locating the band stand in the valley it will be available as a stage for many other community activities.

I should like to suggest that all who are interested in civic affairs go down and look over this project immediately and voice their opinions on its location.

It is not too late yet for Farmington, through aroused public interest, to save all the potential values of this beautiful development.

Very truly yours,
W. Allen Nelson

Hot Iron Bag Aid in Keeping Clothes Smart

Hot weather or cool, the dressmaker who wants to obtain praise for the clothes she wears or sells should put the pressing-iron after it has cooled off. For pressing in the minds of clothing specialists is a major part in adding a tailored look to new clothes, even before the goods are cut.

Suggestions from Marjorie Eastman, clothing specialist at Michigan State College, offer the conclusion that pressing is important at various stages of the work as well as when the garment is finished.

She suggests first pressing the folds and wrinkles out of the fabric before starting to cut it. If the parts of the pattern are pressed, the cutting can be more accurate, too.

If ornamental features, such as pockets, are made before sewing up the seams, they can be pressed while the section is flat. Collars, cuffs and other parts made separately, may be more conveniently pressed as they are completed and before they are attached to the garment. After darts, tucks or pleats have been basted and that portion of the garment tried on, it is time to stitch and then press these details.

Stitched seams are pressed open, particularly if they are later crossed by other seams, as when the waist and skirt of a dress are joined. Sometimes the iron can be used instead of basting a hem or turning a narrow edge. It is a great help in making bias binding or piping that must be folded evenly.

Mrs. James Snyder and son Floyd of Detroit visited the latter's son, who is attending camp at Fish Lake, Sunday afternoon.

"I think it is one of the greatest home improvements I've made. It speeds up my work tremendously!"

End your water-heating worries forever! A new and carefree service—automatic ELECTRIC water heating—frees you from all the responsibilities and annoyances of heating water in the old-fashioned way.

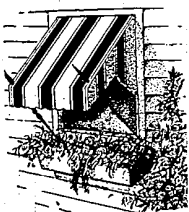

No longer need you run up and down stairs to light a tank, then wait for the water to get hot. An electric water heater provides a definite, assured supply without any attention whatever: Fifty gallons cost less than 10¢ a day. The water is heated at night and stored in a well-insulated tank, where it is available for use during the next twenty-four hours. When you need hot water, just turn the faucet—and there is your hot water on tap!

Any Detroit Edison office will gladly give you full information about this newest electrical convenience for your home. It represents the ultimate in automatic hot water service—safe, clean, and absolutely dependable.

"It is the best, cleanest, and cheapest in the long run. No worries. It is perfect in every way."

Comfort and "Class"

Well-designed and expertly-made awnings add not only a vast amount of comfort to your home—reducing temperatures by 10 to 15 degrees.

But they also add a great deal of distinction, setting your house apart, and adding a touch of beauty and artistry as nothing else can. They actually add far more than their cost to the value of your home by enhancing its beauty.

But the added comfort can't be measured in dollars and cents! Ask people who have had quality awnings installed!
