By Gum

About 1870 a Mexican general, Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna, dictator and president of Mexico, after a sojourn on Staten Island, New York, left behind him a large lump of chicle gum. His landdord, Thomas Adams, came across it and thought it was some kind of rubber. He tried to vulcanize it—without success. He tried it as a base for false techt, again a failure. Then he remembered that the Mexican used always to be chewing it—and that he had loyely white techt. So Adams sent some to a sweet shop. Success at last! In 1871 he took out a patent for inaking chewing gum.—Tit.Bits
