NRS Fills 300,000 Jobs Without Labor Trouble

In over 310,000 jobs filled through the National Reemployment Service in Michigan since October 1, 1935, no man or woman has been knowingly sent to any job where it was necessary to cross a picket line, or ask for work where any strike, lock-out or labor dispute was in progress, declared Major Howard Starret in a Labor Day message of greeting to workers and employers throughout the state.

"Generally speaking conditions in the labor field are improving," he asserts. "There are more people in private employment now than at any time since the depression years. Only three per cent of our replacements today are on security wage work relief projects."

Major Starret said when I took office in 1935. This means growing prosperity for thousands of Michigan workers.

Starret's message paid tribute to all classes in Michigan for the "active spirit" shown NRS officials working in local communities housing its 44 district and branch and 88 part-time offices.

"Newspaper men, radio broadcasters, leaders in every field, have done all in their power to further our work," he said. "Lawyers, psychologists, sociologists, ministers, engineers, as well as labor, industrial business and civic leaders, all have shown their willingness to co-operate with the NRS."

"The public employment office, serving equally the worker and the employer, having for its ideal matching jobs and men, has become a useful adjunct in the life of every community. Urban and rural, of course, there are still thousands of people without jobs; our files of active job-seekers show 99,879 men and 22,688 women. These people present a complex problem. Some of them are already working but feel that they are mal-adjusted and want to find more suitable jobs as outlets for their abilities and ambitions. Some are victims of technological unemployment—that is, the jobs they once held are now obsolete. Some are young people who have left school for economic reasons, but who have abilities and traits that point toward definite types of work. These are examples of problems the modern employment office is working systematically to solve.

"But, continued and persistent co-operation between the employment service, labor and other leaders, and related social agencies for rehabilitation, vocational guidance and training will show; undreamed-of dividends in terms of human welfare and happiness." Starret continued. "To my mind, the best part of the national labor picture in 1937 lies ahead,—also the hardest work. Workers will have a fair share of the rewards in the many new fields opening up, such as the automobile trailer, plastics, television prefabricated homes, air conditioning and Diesel power. The pioneer work has been largely finished. New and advanced social ideas have been given consideration. America will be more prosperous place in which to live and work as many new industries open up."

To solve construction problems, new exhibit palaces for the 1939 Golden Gate International Exposition were built "from the top down," with roots completed, before walls.

MISSING MAN SOUGHT BY NRS IN MICHIGAN

The National Reemployment Service has been asked to locate Patrick Stewart, Martin, in a letter sent to Major Howard Starret, State Director, by Mrs. P. Rankine, a daughter of the missing man. Martin, the letter stated "came to Detroit from Glasgow, Scotland, about two years ago." His name does not appear in the NRS files, and Starret suggested that anyone who might know Martin communicate with Mrs. Rankine, at 29 Croydon Road, Erdington, Birmingham, England.

"Switzerland of America"
The sobriquet, "Switzerland of America," is applied to several of the states, Colorado, for one, because of its magnificent natural beauty. Maine is another state called the Switzerland of America. Its mountainous scenery and abundant snowfalls doubtless give rise to his nickname. It is also applied to New Hampshire, New Jersey and West Virginia. It is applied to New Hampshire in recognition of that state's beautiful mountain scenery; to New Jersey because of its mountain scenery in the northwestern part of the state, occasioned by the Kittatinny range of mountains and by the ranges of the Watchung, Susquehanna and the Middle mountains of the southeast; and to West Virginia from the picturesqueness of the mountain scenery.

In order to accommodate patrons of The Enterprise, the office is open each Saturday afternoon.

Howard and Mrs. Otis are visiting in Petoskey, following a motor trip through Canada and northern Michigan.
