Bishop Spurred Sales
When William Tindale printed the Bible in English abroad because contrary to the laws of England, more than 400 years ago, an English bishop sent his agent to buy up all the copies he could get hold of to make a public bonfire with in London. The bonfire was a huge success, making the people so curious about the book that the second edition was snapped up at any price. And, by the way, the bishop's money for so many copies paid for the printing of the second edition.

Toasters and Lightning
Almost everyone has at some time or other been impressed with the apparently large amounts of electricity going to waste during electrical storms. Now comes science to tell us that even so small amount of current as is used by an electric toaster in one second would require all the electricity contained in five ordinary lightning bolts.

Early Use of Sundials
Sundials are used as ornaments in suburban and country gardens, but in the days of the early Egyptians sundials were used as means of telling time. The Greeks' knowledge of geometry led them to invent elaborate dials, and Ptolemy treated of the construction of such instruments. After the fall of the classic civilization, sundials continued to be made by the Arabs. Much experimentation was done in the Seventeenth century, but in the Eighteenth century clocks and watches began to replace this device.

Waitresses Registered
It's trying to get an honest girl who wants to earn an honest living as a waitress in Peiping. The latest decree by the city fathers requires all waitresses to be registered with the police. The decree is issued in the name of preservation of decorum and good custom.

Twice the beauty from rouge

How you will love the soft, glowing beauty of Princess Par rouge. Never have you known rouge like it. For only Princess Par blends of its own accord, changing magically. It seems to give color coming from within, as in a natural blush. Truly it does give twice the beauty of ordinary rouge. Try it.

FOUR PLACES
in your home that should be Light Conditioned

BEDSIDE LIGHTING—100 to 150 Watts

BATHROOM MIRROR 100 to 180 Watts

KITCHEN LIGHTING—150 to 200 Watts

STUDY DESK—100 to 150 Watts

Bedside lighting, bathroom lighting, kitchen lighting, and lighting for a child's study table... these should receive careful consideration, because these are the places where eyes are used constantly on tasks that require close visual application. These are the places where abuse of the eyes through poor lighting may result in permanent injury. These are places in your home that should be LIGHT CONDITIONED. Compare the recommended lamp wattage with the lamp sizes at these four locations in your home. Sizes are total: There may be one lamp bulb or several.

Good lighting at the bedside can help to prevent eyestrain caused by reading in bed. Good lighting on either side of the bathroom mirror will greatly facilitate shaving and primping. Good lighting in the kitchen makes cooking, dishwashing, and other kitchen tasks easier. And most important of all, good lighting at the study desk will help to protect your child's eyes against eyestrain.

Phone for a survey of your lighting today. There is no charge for this service. Measure your light with the Sight Meter and see for yourself whether you have enough light in these four important places to assure safe, easy seeing.
