Connect Passion Flower

With Lord's Crucifixion

The name passion flower arose from the resemblance of the floral parts to important implements of Christ's crucifixion, the resemblance being first pointed out by early Italian and Spanish travelers. Some of the early religious men saw in the coron the crown of thorns, others thought it the halo; to some of them the five stamens were the five wounds, to others, writes Henricks Hedge in Nature Magazine, they represented the hammers used to drive the nails, represented by the three-knobbed styles. Five sepals, together with five petals, stood for the ten apostles—Peter, who denied, and Judas, who betrayed, were left out of the reckoning. The innumerable mitten-like leaves of some species are the pointing hands of the accusers, who held cords or whips, the tendrils.

Legend and superstition have long been associated with these beautiful blooms. In "Plant Lore, Legends and Lyrics," Folkard states that when the Spaniards first saw the rich festoons of this plant hanging from the branches of the forest trees they "regarded the magnificent blossom as a token that the Indians would be converted to Christianity, as they saw in its several parts the emblems of the Passion of our Lord."

If the delicate beauty of the flower had not been a source of satisfaction to man its fruit would certainly have been, for certain species supply succulent, berry-like fruits. In some cases these are highly perfumed and appear often on tables in the tropics.

Speed of Large Rivers

Depends Much on Depth

Most large rivers travel at only walking speed. As rivers usually have their sources on very high ground, their velocity is greatest at the beginning of their course, which is for many streams a succession of rapids and waterfalls.

The velocity of falls, which is often enormous, cannot very well be included in any estimate of the velocity of rivers, although the impetus given by rapids, as well as the general inclination of the bed of the stream, has a most important influence on the rate of its current.

But the velocity of a river does not altogether depend on the slope of its bed. Much is owing to its depth and volume, such an authority in the Cleveland Plain Dealer. Most rivers, therefore, flow with varying velocity at different seasons of the year. Furthermore, bends in the course, jutting peaks of rock, or other obstacles, interfere with its speed, so that the water of a river flows at different velocities at different parts of its bed; it moves slower at the bottom than at the surface and at the sides than at the middle.

There is no stream which has a regular current of 30 miles an hour, or even 25 miles an hour. The lower Amazon flows at a rate of three miles an hour. The Mississippi, in its lower course, has a velocity of about three and a half miles an hour. The Congo has for many miles above its mouth a current of about seven miles an hour. The impetus of its great falls extending for a great distance below them. The Nile, similarly influenced, moves for a long distance at nine miles an hour.

Probably the most rapid river in the world, with the exception of some small streams which are nearly torrents or cataracts, is the River Rhone, in France. At some seasons the current of this stream reaches a speed of 40 miles an hour. In the dryer season, however, it drops to a rate of six miles an hour.

EASTER'S MESSAGE OF FAITH

Each Easter we witness the miracle of resurrection as Nature brings forth triumphant new life from the cold tomb of Winter.

Yet, Easter's message of hope is not alone of life eternal; it is a living promise for today and tomorrow to a world struggling for release from ignorance, injustice, poverty and oppression—that in God's own time the stones which now block humanity's progress into the light, will be rolled away.
