RO-BOX - Drugs

Did Drugs Kill Jim Morrison?

Questions should be sent to the Community Commission on Drug Abuse, P.O. Box 800, Livonia, Mich. 48151.
Q. Wasn't the death of the rock musician, Jim Morrison, caused by drugs?

A. R.H. Plymouth
A. Not in the sense that you probably mean. Cause of death of the lead singer of "The Doors" was officially listed in Paris as a heart attack. Jim Morrison had been a user of "hard" drugs in the past, but his friends state quite definitely that this had not been the case for some time.

When Jim "bought the farm" (died) as they say, alcohol made a pretty heavy down payment. But alcohol was only one way in which he abused his body: he had been known to jump or fall out of windows in playful horsing around.

This would seem to be an example of someone with a pretty strong bent for self-destruction whose almost complete disregard for his health finally caught up with him at a much too early age. Drugs were just one part of the problem, and probably not the underlying cause.

Q. What is angel dust?
A. "Angel dust" is a term for a drug we discussed; PCP, also known as "hog" and phencyclidine. This drug, as we reported, is used as an animal tranquilizer, is not safe for human use and can be fatal.

One way in which it is used is to spray it on mint leaves, which then are dried, rolled into a cigarette and smoked. Both the mind altering and lethal effects can be produced by inhalation.

"Angel dust" is obviously not an appropriate term for this one.

Q. Wasn't marijuana used in the past in this country for medicinal purposes? If so, was it really any good? Is there any chance that it might be used for some good medical effect now or in the future?

D.S., Livonia
A. In answer to your first question, marijuana (cannabis sativa) was an official drug in the United States Pharmacopoeia until the time of its being classified as a narcotic. By that time, its use had fallen off for several reasons: unpredictability of effects (due mostly to the difficulty of producing a product of standard, reliable potency); and the advent of newer drugs that were more predictable in their actions and more effective.

The drug was used to relieve pain, to encourage sleep and to soothe restlessness. Its most interesting use - and one that was pretty well documented, at least by the criteria of those times - was treatment of migraine headache. Migraine, a fiercely painful and blindingly strong headache, is still very difficult to treat even today.

Whether the beneficial effects for cannabis claimed in the past for migraine would hold up under today's more critical methods of evaluating drugs is an unanswered question, but one that might deserve looking into.

Obviously, self-medication with this drug is not recommended nor desirable in treatment of a serious condition such as migraine. Without proper medical supervision the use of this or any other drug in self-medication may worsen the course of the disease.

Unfortunately, today so much time and expertise has to be devoted to the problems arising from abuse of the drug that research into legitimate medical usage has been pushed into the background.
