

Building Started for Phone Exhibits At the New York World's Fair of 1939

The Bell Telephone System's exhibition building for the New York World's Fair of 1939 is already under way and these pictures are of the architect's model. Above: the central rotunda and southeastern entrance. Upper left: Night view, with formal entrance and shady grove in the foreground. Lower left: General view of the building, which will cover more than three acres. The Bell Telephone Laboratories are originating the unique displays of advances in voice communication which will be shown.

One of the most interesting structures for the New York World's Fair of 1939 is already under construction. It is the exhibition building of the Bell Telephone System, and will contain unique and striking popular and scientific displays revealing the advances which have been brought about in the transmission of the spoken word.

The building occupies a triangular plot of slightly more than three acres immediately north of the Fair's Theme Center. The formal entrance is through a pavilion at the point of the plot adjacent to the Theme Plaza.

In the semi-circular court of this pavilion is a sculptured group by Carl Milles. From this point to the building proper a walk leads through a grove of 150 mountain pine trees, chosen because they allow ample room for people to move about under their spreading lower branches. Pools and fountains add to the attractiveness of this landscaped area.

The other entrances to the building, fronting on the two main avenues which bound the plot, will be flanked by tall vermillion panels which will be decorated, respectively, by Hildreth Meier and Edward Trumbull. The mass of the building varies in different heights to house the varied exhibits that are now being developed in the Bell Telephone Laboratories.

Along the south side of the site runs a decorative colonnade. Where the axis of the transportation of the Fair meets this side of the plot, the building wall presents a surface fifty feet high, which will be covered by a large map showing cities in relief and animated by changing lights to indicate the main lines of telephonic communication around the world. Above the large circular wing a decorative symbol of telephonic communication surmounts the building, lighted to form a distinctive night display.

The Bell Telephone Laboratories are developing several new and interesting exhibits for the New York World's Fair of 1939. It was this research organization which introduced at Chicago the exhibit of the "acoustical illusion" with the dummy "Oscar"; at San Diego the "voice mirror," which allows one to hear how his voice sounds to others when he telephones; and at Dallas a participating exhibit through which a visitor could test his own hearing. The exhibits of New York will be many times larger than at any of the previous expositions.

The building is a design of Voorhees, Gmelin and Walker. The interior, including the display of exhibits and the decorations, is being designed by Henry Dreyfuss. The building itself will be constructed by Marc Eldritt and Son.

An acoustic treatment inside the building has been engineered by Electrical Research Products Incorporated. The landscaping of the plot has been designed by Vitale and Geiffert.

Teachers, librarians, parents, leaders of boys' clubs and hundreds of thousands of boys, themselves, enthusiastically recommend The American Boy magazine for all boys over twelve. "It's more like a companion than a magazine," remarked one high school student. "It gives advice and entertainment on every subject in which a young fellow is interested. I made our school basketball team solely because of playing tips I read in The American Boy." Trained writers and artists, famous coaches and athletes, explorers, scientists and men successful in business and industry join with an experienced staff to produce, in The American Boy, just the sort of stories and articles boys like best.

The American Boy sells on all newsstands at 15¢ per copy. Subscription prices are $1.50 for one year or $3.00 for three years. To subscribe, simply send your name and address and remittance direct to The American Boy, 2330 Second Div., Detroit, Michigan.
