Three Writers Credited "Fourth Estate" Authors

The press is called the fourth estate because of its influence upon public affairs. Formerly in England and France, the church, the nobility and the commons were known as the three estates of the realm.

There has been much discussion as to who first called the press the fourth estate, says a writer in the Indianapolis News. Authorship of the phrase is variously attributed to Burke, Carlyle and Macaulay. In 1800 Thomas Carlyle published his "Heroes and Hero-Worship." In Lecture 5, of that work, he says:

"Burke said there were three estates in parliament; but in the reporters' gallery yonder, there sat a fourth estate more important far than they all. It is not a figure of speech, or a witty saying; it is a literal fact—very momentous to us in these times."

Carlyle's style of writing is such that it is not clear whether or not he intended to give Burke's exact phraseology. The phrase "fourth estate" does not appear in any of Burke's published writings and it is not known where Carlyle obtained his information. Some authorities have suggested that he may have coined the phrase himself. Three years earlier he published "The French Revolution." One chapter in the work is entitled "The Fourth Estate." It contains the following sentence:

"A fourth estate of able editors, springs up." But Macaulay had used the phrase as early as 1828. That year Macaulay wrote in the Edinburgh Review:

"The gallery in which the reporters sit has become a fourth estate of the realm."

"The Fort on the Lake"

The early history of the port of London is shrouded in the mists of antiquity. As far back as A. D. 43, however, Roman invaders of British hordes were enabled to cross the Thames by a rude structure on the site of the present London bridge, and found the "Pool" guarded by a fort, as indicated in legend's ancient Celtic name of Lyndon—the fort on the lake. Even then London was a place of considerable trade and population, and despite the setbacks of plagues, invasions and political unsettlements, its commerce steadily increased until in Queen Elizabeth's reign London had become the leading British port and contributed half the customs revenue of the country.

Horse Chestnuts
Horse chestnuts were among the favorite shade trees of the pioneer. In Daniel Boone's day there was the common but false notion that buckeyes carried in a man's pocket prevented rheumatism. Old hunters found that the longer they carried a buckeye in their pocket, the more attractive it became because of the richly colored brown or walnut coat of the nut took on a high polish. The light brown scar on the nut suggests the half-opened eye of a deer. This suggested the name buckeye. Alcohol may be made from the meat of the horse chestnut. Wood of the horse chestnut is of excellent quality. It is strong and light and is used in the manufacture of wooden legs.

Arlington Cemetery Once Taken as "Tax Property"

The Arlington National cemetery occupies a famous old Virginia estate situated on Arlington Heights, opposite the city of Washington, overlooking the Potomac.

In the center of this tract of more than 1,100 acres is the mansion known as the Arlington house. The property was originally owned by Martha Washington and was inherited by her grandson, George Washington Parke Custis in a descendant of her first marriage. The mansion was built by him and he occupied it until his death in 1857.

It passed then into the hands of his daughter, the wife of Gen. Robert E. Lee, and the Lees lived there until 1861.

During the Civil war the estate was confiscated by the federal government, non-payment of taxes being the specific basis for the seizure. The military cemetery was established there in 1864, the first burial being that of William Christian, a Union soldier from Pennsylvania, on May 12, 1864. Since that time, more than 45,950 persons have been buried there.

Some years after the war Lee's heir, George Washington Custis Lee, brought suit against the government to recover the estate, and in 1884 was awarded the title to it. He transferred his restored rights to the government for $150,000.

discarded reed organ for $2. Next he purchased an out-of-date household vacuum cleaner for $3.50. He discarded a gas tank hose for a hookup he quickly had the musical instrument functioning far better than it ever had in the days when the organist's foot-power was required.

"The dependability and power of the vacuum cleaner keep the organ operating at fullest efficiency," he said. "If cleanliness is as often, it must be doubly so here, where this indispensable home appliance now proves its equal usefulness in the church."

At his new post in Wolcottville, Ind., to which he has just been transferred, the Rev. Mr. Blanchard said he hoped his example would lead to the bringing of good organ music into many other churches.

"Life" will be the subject of the lesson-lesson in all Christian Science churches throughout the world on Sunday, July 17.

The Golden Text, (John 5:26), is "As the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself."

Among the Bible citations in this passage (Matt. 7: 13, 14): "Enter ye in at the strait gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction; and many there be which go in theret: because strait is the gate and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

Correlative passages to be read from the Christian Science text-book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, include the following (p. 324): "The way is straight and narrow, which leads to the understanding that God is the only Life."
