Robert Young, Franchot Tone, Robert Taylor in "Three Comrades"

Robert Taylor literally "took it" in the nature of "pulled punches" during the filming of "Three Comrades," screen version of the widely-read Erich Maria Remarque novel, which plays at the Redford Theatre Sunday, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, with an all-star cast including Franchot Tone, Margaret Sullivan, Franchot Tone and Robert Young.

For in the new picture the young star participated in some of the most realistic riot scenes ever produced on the screen. The episodes depicting the activities of a revolutionary group in the aftermath of the World War, placed Taylor in the midst of a milling mass of political partisans who charge, warlike. The actor had to fight his way through the mob and took it on the chin from some three hundred "rioters" armed with clubs and clubs. Although made of light materials the clubs and clubs were capable of raising bumps and they did!

In a subsequent scene the three comrades battle four slugs in a terrific fist fight in which Taylor is struck several times and Franchot Tone received two million injuries. So, critical are today's audiences of screen realism that both actors refused to countenance

Word Candlestick's Origin

Traced to Rushes, Knots

The origin of the word candlestick is found in the long stick of wood to which was fastened a bundle of rushes or a pine knot. This was carried from place to place to be needed or spiked to the wall. Later, called Alice R. Rollins in the Los Angeles Times, when the art of candlemaking was developed, the candles were placed on candle beams—a rude chandelier of cross-sticks of wood or strips of metal with wicks or spikes, in alighting stands, sconces, which were also called scones or candlearms.

The candles were made of tallow, spermaceti and bayberry, the latter obtained from bayberries which grew plentifully in New England and was noted for its pure, spicy fragrance. In a letter written by Robert Beverly in 1705, he states that "nice people often put them out on purpose to have the incense of the expiring snuff."

All the lighting devices in the American colonies for the first 200 years were generally the work of individual workmen. They were made by blacksmiths, tinmiths, pewterers, glass-blowers, carpenters or whatever the craftsman might be. Each of these created his own design which were made for local distribution as necessity demanded and of which no two were exactly alike.

Candlesticks were made in wood, iron, brass, pewter and later silver. As the colonies became more prosperous and trade with the mother country increased many beautiful examples in silver, glass, pottery such as dolls, and later in the Eighteenth century porcelain such as Chelsea were imported.

Traveled in His Canoe to Minister to Indians

Jacques Marquette, one of the most noted of the pioneers of France to the New World, was born in France in 1637, became a Jesuit priest in 1666 emigrated to Canada to establish missions and explore new lands for his country. At that time, writes Leslie Hartley in the Washington Star, the French settlements were mere trading posts, widely scattered, and Father Marquette was forced to travel hundreds of miles in his canoe to preach to the Indians and establish mission houses along the Great Lakes.

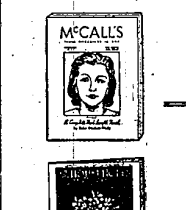

In the spring of 1673 Marquette joined Joliet in an expedition by canoe by way of the Illinois to the Mississippi river and down that stream to Arkansas. De Soto had discovered the Mississippi more than a hundred years before but nothing came of his discovery. Marquette, however, who had endured much suffering on the journey, prepared excellent maps and wrote descriptions of the new country which resulted in others following and developing the Mississippi valley.

Two years later Father Marquette started on a missionary journey along the Michigan, was taken ill from exposure and died May 19, 1675.

The town of Marquette, Mich., and the Marquette river are named in his honor.
