FATHER LARKIN'S COMMENTS ON HIS RECENT TOUR

While there the group had an audience with the Holy Father, Pius XI, whom they found in very fine health, and whose mind they found was still keen and active. Rev. Larkin stated that the size of St. Peter's Church was lost in its magnificence. Evidence of the size of the beautiful symmetrical, benchless structure was given several weeks before when 50,000 stood in the church to witness the Easter canonization of three Saints. Rome showed the Pilgrims how Christianity conquered paganism. The Ruins of the City reflect for them paganism, the church Christianity.

Peaceful Rome
Rome is a quiet and peaceful city. Tire treads revolving on the pavement can be heard, but no auto horns are sounded. All motorists are subject to three dollar fines for blowing a horn.

Present day artists and architects are living in the glory of the dead, Father Larkin discovered. The watery streets of Venice, the tuneful music and songs, and colorful gondolas, were very impressive. Many Americans are always found there. St. Mark's church is also a magnificent sight to behold.

In Vienna a hush among the people is almost audible as the spy system of Germany is very pronounced, noted Rev. Larkin. Natives fear to answer travelers' questions for fear the interrogators might turn out to be spies. Arriving in Hungary the Pilgrims felt a relief. Crossing into the border a crowd assembled to see the Americans and hear addresses by the priests.

Eucharistic Congress
The Eucharistic Congress was in conference from May 25 to June 30. Although Rev. Larkin would venture no guess as to the attendance he stated that thousands upon thousands were present from all corners of the globe and that 200,000 Germans and Austrians were not permitted to attend by Hitler.

Magnificent was the word used by the local priest to describe the scene on the Blue Danube when the "lighted faith" of the people was demonstrated. Cardinals, archbishops, priests and nuns proceeded down the river as little children with large lighted candles saluted the "Blessed Sacrament."

The main celebration was held at Hero Square, which was adorned by a 100 foot altar. For the occasion two lakes were drained and boarded over, and thousands of chairs placed.

Mars', Hill
Continuing his journey Rev. Larkin spent a day in Athens. He visited Mars' Hill, next to the Parthenon, where St. Paul preached to the Athenians. The ruins furnish evidence of architectural grandeur, and today serve as a pattern for architects, who study the mathematical accuracy of the Parthenon.

In Cairo, Egypt, the Farmington pastor, visited what is believed to have been the home of the Holy Family following their flight. Here in the hand of pyramids he rode a camel, which he found to be a delightful diversion. When he came upon the famed Sphinx, with its notoriously misplaced nose, he learned that legend has it that one member of Napoleon's army took a "pot shot" at the Sphinx and caused the disfiguration. Also in Egypt he was impressed by the boldness of the beggars who have been "spotted" by American generosity.

It was at Port Said that Father Larkin learned to appreciate American transportation. A train ride in that vicinity was sandy, air-conditionless, and decidedly heedless of schedule.

Religious Marks
Palestine has many religious marks of interest. The Farmington priest visited the Church of Mt. Carmel, the cities of Jerusalem, Nazareth, Bethlehem and Bethsaida, and he saw the Dead Sea. Arriving in Hungary he saw the church of the Holy Sepulchre, the place of the mailing of Jesus to the Cross with the hole in the ground still preserved, and Christ's Tomb.

Father Larkin returned to Rome, flew to Paris over the Alps to London across the English Channel, and then proceeded on to Ireland. He finds the poets are right in their songs of the green hills. The Irish impressed him as a gravelly, cheerful people who are sociable, and who have distinctive habits and customs.

Bidding adieu to Ireland Rev. Larkin sailed on the Manhattan and arrived in New York, where the symbolic Goddess of Liberty told him that America is the home of the free. He returned to Farmington July 13.

Paul Horie Survives Twenty Foot Tree Fall

Little Paul Horie, of the Losey Corner community, is telling his friends of his harrowing experience which befell him, and which he miraculously survived.

Paul was playing with a group of older boys who live in his vicinity. When he climbed a tree he lost his balance and witnesses say he fell about 20 feet. His fall was broken by several limbs. He landed on the ground badly shaken, scratched and bruised but apparently otherwise unharmed.

Watching Fishes Beneficial
Watching the rhythmic movements of fishes and the slow undulations of submarine plant life is beneficial to the overwrought nerves of patients, say the doctors. Dietitians agree that fish are as soothing to the senses when alive as they are supposed to be good for the brain when bottled.—Pearson's Weekly.

CHILDREN WANT TO KNOW LOCAL HISTORY ANSWERS

Aid is being asked from local citizens by a group of children in the form of answers to questions concerning Farmington's history. Can you help them? They would appreciate hearing the answers. They want to know: What is the population? How did Farmington get its name? Where did the first store stand? What was the first family's name? Were there any Indian tribes here? How old is our community?

The children are members of the Methodist Vacation School who plan to study and build a model. They are being instructed by Mrs. Henry Otis and Miss Virginia Robb.

Eighty-eight children have enrolled in the school during the opening week. Classes will continue until August 26. Children who wish to register for the next two weeks are asked to be at the church Monday at 9 o'clock.

Under the guidance of Miss Ruth Schroeder, the Primary Class is building a large Palestinian Village. Groups are constructing houses and furnishings, a school, a synagogue, a village well, markets, merchant shops and a pastoral scene.
