"Mr. Worldly Wiseman"

(Christian Science Monitor)

"What they keep in cages is none enough; the wild ones walk through the 'travels,' was a remark attributed to a zoological gardens custodian in a book that has recently been the subject of an action for libel before the Lord Chief Justice and a special jury in the King's Bench Division of the High Court of England.

This action arose because the writer had applied to an undesirable character in the book a name closely resembling that of an actual stock exchange broker who claimed that he had thereby been injured in the estimation of his friends. "It may have caused a 'stump,' the defense counsel unkindly intimated.

The incident may suggest the need for a list of names guaranteed not to belong to anybody, yet suitable for the ticketing of the villains of fiction. The writers may be saved from having to resort for this purpose to "Mr. Worldly Wiseman" and his ilk. The British Court of Justice found for the defendants in the case. The ground of decision was that the sensible one of those who knew the complainant could not reasonably infer that he had been meant. So "Mr. Worldly Wiseman" can be left where he belongs, which is in the pages of John Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" of the year 1678.

To "Provide Our Wants"

(Christian Science Monitor)

In a day when human thought is so generally seeking merely material satisfactions and turning to government as the sole source of supply an "awakening word" is particularly timely. It has been well spoken by one who through two score years has borne a burden of care few know. As a part of his broadcast greeting her people on the occasion of her birthday, Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands said:

"I was conscious of the insufficiency of human knowledge and ability and firmly believed that only the aid of God could provide our wants. I now look back on these forty years in the light of the Lord's guidance and am filled with gratitude."

Our times have seen a new emphasis on the father division of material wealth. Changing conditions have also caused governments to give more and more attention to the care and security of the weak, the aged, or the unemployed. Much of this development is genuine progress. But there are temptations to forget that supply is not really material. No division of things will satisfy the spiritual needs of men and no security is so sure as that provided by the energy, adaptability, discernment, justice, honesty and kindness expressed by the individual through better understanding of their divine source.

Bicycles

(Exchange)

There are more bicycles in use in the United States today than ever before. That is the report of the Iowa Director of Motor Vehicles and he is talking about the ordinary "foot-propelled" bikes, not motorcycles. Trade statistics bear out his assertion and every motorist must have noticed the increased number of bicycle riders who add to the perils of motoring on the highways.

I remember when bicycles were a rare novelty. I rode one of the old-style high-wheel bikes in my boyhood. The present type of bicycle, with pneumatic tires, did not come into use until I was through high school. There were no automobiles in those days, but cyclists scared horses and farmers used to set their dogs on us. Around the cities and suburbs special "cycle paths" used to be built to keep the volume of off both sidewalks and the main thoroughfares.

If bicycles continue to multiply it would seem like good sense to go back to the old practice of putting a narrow strip, exclusively for cyclists, using along each new road built.

Toll Of A Cigarette

(Christian Science Monitor)

The Monitor's Travel Editor, just returned from the interior of British Columbia, reports that even that hitherto unspoiled country has been severely ravaged by forest fires during the present dry summer there. Human settlements because there is no organized force to combat them, spread over thousands of acres until they reach a natural barrier.

ELECTION RESULTS ARE NOT OFFICIAL FOR TWENTY DAYS

Contrary to popular opinion, the results of an election, for state senators and representatives; U. S. senators and representatives; and all officers elected by a district, are not known officially for at least twenty days after an election.

"The board of county examiners must wait with three days after an election to canvass the votes in their respective counties," a state official explains. "These returns are sent to the board of state canvassers, which consists of the secretary of state, the state treasurer and the superintendent of public instruction. The board of state canvassers are required by statute to meet not later than twenty days after an election to canvass the returns from the eighty-three counties in Michigan.

May Adjourn

"In an event that the counties have not made their returns of the election, the state board of canvassers may adjourn for a later meeting, but, the official canvass must be completed within forty days after the election.

"The action of the state board of canvassers is the ultimate authority in the matter of people who have had to do with the receiving and counting; recording and transmitting of the votes which signify the will of the people at an election.

"While the efforts on the part of the press and radio station operators to bring to the people early returns of elections, is unofficial, it is nevertheless appreciated by the secretary of state, who unofficially, is as interested in reading the early unofficial returns as any other citizen."

Secretary of State Will Continue Survey

A preliminary survey of the Financial Responsibility Division's 16,375 convictions, with ages ranging from 18 to 66, recorded since October 17, 1933—reveals that 37 years is the average age for persons convicted of driving while under the influence of intoxicating liquor.

The survey further substantiates the belief that the majority of Financial Responsibility cases are convicted of intoxication. Since 1933 when Michigan's Motor Vehicle Financial Responsibility Law took effect, 327 of the drivers taken from the Michigan highways have been convicted of this offense.

Another interesting feature of this survey reveals that of the total number of convictions, only 21% involve those under 30 years of age.

The results of this preliminary survey have been so satisfactory that it has been decided by Leon D. Case, Secretary of State, to continue the study until completed.

HEAVY SUMMER RAINFALL IS BOON TO DUCK HUNTERS

More than average rainfall this summer may have spoiled many a Sunday picnic but it set the stage for a good show for the duck hunters this fall.

The abundance of water in the northwest, extending from Michigan through Canada and Alaska, where the majority of ducks shot in this state breed and nest, has been especially favorable to the raising of a large number of broods.

Because the rains were widespread, the ducks will not find it necessary to concentrate on the larger marshes and are likely to be found scattered over a much wider area than in a dry period. Game investigators of the department of conservation point out that this scattering of the waterfowl will improve local hunting opportunities, and to make good early shooting when the season opens October 1 to continue through November 14.

Expectations are that more ducks will be bagged this fall than last not only due to their apparent abundance and because they will be present in more areas, but also because the season will be 15 days longer than it was in 1937.

Salesman Obligingly Demonstrates Product

One high school principal will take more care henceforth when he asks a salesman to demonstrate his products. His lesson was taught him by Ernie Plinkett, National Professional League football player.

Ernie, who plays for the Washington Redskins in the football season, is a sporting goods salesman in the off-season. When a California high school principal asked him to test his shoulder pads by hitting a door, the former Southern California All-American obliged, and tore out the side of the office and injured three students in the corridor outside in the demonstration.

He got the contract.

"Unreality" will be the subject of the Lesson - Sermon in all Christian Science Churches throughout the world on Sunday, October 2.

The Golden Text (Job 15:31) is: "Let not him that is despised trust in vanity, for vanity shall be his recompense."

Among the Bible citations in this passage (Isaiah 41:11): "Behold, all they that were incensed against thee shall be ashamed and confounded; they shall be as nothing; and they that strive with thee shall perish."

Correlative passages to be read in the Christian Science text book, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, include the following (p. 49): "Where the spirit of God is, and there is no place where God is not, evil becomes nothing—the opposite of the something of Spirit."

Will You Have a Slice Of Frozen Bread?

Bread for a baker's luncheon to be held in Chicago next month has already been baked. It won't be stale, though; it has been frozen by a new process.

When thawed, sliced, and passed around the table at the annual convention of the American Bakers' Association, the month-old bread will be fresh as the fragrant loaves that used to come out of the old wood stove on a Saturday afternoon, promises Dr. William H. Cathcart, who carried on the research into frozen bread for the American Institute of Baking here.

The process of freezing bread is similar to that used to preserve peas, corn, meat, and other edibles, said Dr. Cathcart. But when bread is thawed it behaves differently from other frozen foods. It does not have to be used immediately, as they do, but can be kept as long as bread that has never gone into the quick-freezer, according to Dr. Cathcart.

It may prove valuable to people that have to carry their supplies a long distance. Take polar expeditions, for example. Arctic explorers never seem to get around to that Saturday baking. But they could load up their ships with frozen loaves, keep them that way until needed, then bring them into their warm cabin to thaw, and mmm! fresh bread!

GAME OFFICIALS ARE COUNTING DEER POPULATION

As cool breezes drift down from the north, hunters are not the only ones who are thinking about the coming deer season. Game investigators are attempting to count the number of deer on seven widely separated tracts in northern Michigan, in a continuation of census drives carried on since 1935 with the cooperation of the Michigan CCC.

Game men believe that the 150 or so square miles thus covered in a year will give some idea of the status of the deer herd, both as to the current deer population as well as the trends from one year to another. Comparisons may also be made between areas located in the southern peninsula and those in the upper peninsula, or between different areas in the same peninsula.

The preliminary drives are regarded by game investigators as insufficient evidence on which to base any conclusions. Of eight census drives in the upper peninsula five showed an increase over the number of deer counted last year, while three showed a decrease. Of seven drives in the lower peninsula all showed a decrease from the 1937 count. Subsequent drives will furnish more data while the two most important ones are those that will be conducted just before and just after the deer hunting season.

Business Is Rushing And Costly at Library

Miss Librarian gives of her time ungrudgingly, but when one single cent in Cincinnati costs three new $20 dictionaries and lost papers out of rare reference books, she protests.

"Contracts," she declared, "are an economic and social loss. They take their toll in time, effort, and material without a fair return to the participants nor society in general."

"Why they were out all our 'Presidents,' complained one librarian. By 'Presidents' she explained she meant a collection of short biographies of the nation's Number One Executives.

"They stood in line for turns at the dictionary," stated another.

"We had to set a time limit for the use of certain reference books during one contest," said another. "And people actually stood in line waiting for the library to open and spent the whole day here, having small children hold their places while they went out to eat."
