Baby Otter, Badger and

Other Animals Like Play

Most playful of all wild creatures are otters, for even when full grown they cannot resist anything in the shape of a ball that floats. Baby badgers romp together, putting out their feet and kicking like black and white balls, then bounding round and round on their short stiffened legs. A favorite game is to mount a fallen tree, and its companion to try to pull it down, relates Oliver G. Pike, F. Z. S., in London Tit-Bits Magazine. Young polecats play a similar game, but are far more graceful. As they prance around, their slender backs are arched, and they look most attractive in their rich dark brown glossy fur. Badgers, polecats, stoats, and weasels have very little method in their play, unlike the organized games of the otter. I doubt if anyone has ever detected play among fish, nor seen lizards or snakes indulging in games. All these are cold blooded and are not warm when the temperature is warm enough to give them an interest in life. The play of foxes will often turn to tragedy so far as the farmer is concerned. If they get among fowls they will kill one for food then, like puppies, chase everything that moves. If the birds had the sense to keep still the fox might pass them by, but he will slaughter them by the dozen while they continue to run.

Geologists Are Puzzled

By Earth Slide in Idaho

PRESTON, IDAHO.—Geologists were puzzled over the gigantic earth slide that moved 2,000,000 tons of earth and shifted a 25-acre farm pasture 50 feet into the Bear river. A large icy-covered pond on the plot of ground affected by the slide was not disturbed. Not even a crack in the ice showed. Cattle grazing on the sliding terrain scrambled to safety as their pasture began to move. Two small boys skating on a nearby slough witnessed the phenomenon. "We heard a lot of popping and rumbling," 12-year-old Ivan Thompson and Francis Rasmussen said. "We looked up and saw the hill wobble the one we used to hunt rabbits on." Affecting an area equal to two city blocks, one corner of the perambulating pasture slid far enough to almost dam the river. After the 50-foot drop the surface of the pasture was folded like an accordion and was stratified with large cracks except around the area of the pond.

Old Mountie Tells Of Early Campaign

Last of Original Troop Is Living in London.

LONDON.—A man who was one of the original "mounties" who established law and order in the wild northwest territories of the Nineteenth century Canada has been found living in London. He is James H. Fullwood, 88 years old, who believes that as an explorer 100 he is the only surviving member of the three troops of the newly formed Northwest Mounted Police, which on June 13, 1874, crossed the United States border into Alberta. They went to exterminate the Montana "bad men" who were playing the Indians with whisky, robbing and murdering them and trying on the few white settlers scattered through the territory. So widespread had their activities become that they were endangering the peace of the dominion. The "mounties" had orders to suppress them at any cost. "We finally moved them out from Fargo, N. D., in a column two miles long—horses and men, cattle, farm implements and Red River carts which you could hear squeaking a mile off," Fullwood said. "We were making for Edmonton, Alta., at the foot of the Rockies, which we had to patrol. It was a hard trip of well over a thousand miles. It took us over five months. "It was especially hard on the horses and cattle. Forage was scarce and grazing generally non-existent. Yet day after day our horses covered 50 miles. Long before we made camp at night the men were leading them. "About halfway along our trail we had to establish a 'crippled camp' for men and horses. Shortly after that the main body, which carried on, had plenty of meat for the first time. We were in buffalo country. "Our Colonel Macleod established his post in the Porcupine Hills, 1,100 feet above sea level, and built the new police, and I helped with the construction. Today it is the town of Macleod. "We had little trouble with the Indians. They soon realized that we were there to protect them and they became our allies in our fight with the criminals."

The Garden of Eden
On the supposition that the Garden of Eden narrative in Genesis describes a real country, many efforts have been made to establish its location, and many books have been written on the subject, often widely disagreeing. Some have located Eden near the town of Kermah, in southern Babylonia, not far from the Persian Gulf. This is at the junction of the Tigris and Euphrates rivers, in what is now the British mandatory kingdom of Iraq. Others have placed the Garden in Armenia, near the sources of these rivers. The region near Damascus, in Syria, has also been suggested; and some extremists have argued that it was in America, or Australia, or at the North Pole. The general opinion is that the description in the second chapter of Genesis refers to southern Babylonia.

HORSEADISH HAS PLACE AS "LIFE OF THE PARTY"

A few years ago a dish of horse-radish, brought in by a kindly farm neighbor was as much an indication of spring as the appearance of marbles, kites and roller-skates; then, this root (like the parsnip which it strongly resembles in appearance) was thought to be edible only in the spring after a long winter's sleep in the ground. A member of the Mustard family, renowned for its peppery temper, it was well-known to Russians, Poles and Germans in the Middle Ages. In common with a number of our other foods, it is found growing wild in many parts of our own country, usually in cool, damp meadows.

The demand of jaded city palates for a spur to sluggish appetites has led to an ever-increasing cultivation of the horse-radish, although the labor required, to say nothing of its demand for very special soil, greatly limits its production. Home gardens near small and larger cities continue to supply limited quantities of the fresh, garter root to both individual buyers and merchants. However, Michigan dealers who handle it in any quantity buy the roots in 100 lb. barrel lots or in innervated cloth sacks from St. Louis, Missouri, near which it flourishes in land moist from the overflow of the river.

Not a Food
Horse-radish has practically no nutritive value, but it has as definite a place in the food world as "the life of the party" in the social world. Instead of a transient spring

Cowboy Is Pained
By a Horse on Him
BUTTE, MONT.—Old-time cowboys have a hard time maintaining the link between the past and the present. William J. Blomdino, deciding on an auto instead of his horse for a trip to town, was arrested and jailed for drunken driving.

As he pinned in his cell for the open spaces, the police allowed him to sell his car and pay his $50 fine. Returning to his home, he broke his ankle trying to mount it and was taken to the hospital.

visitor, it is now used generally as mixed "half and half" with whipped cream and a wee bit of sugar to accompany the baked or boiled ham. It gives zest to the hot dog or hamburger and breaks the monotony of thickened gravies and aspies; mixed with Philadelphia cream cheese and spread on crackers, it makes a delightful appetizer; dressed in salad dressing—and no cooking.
