"Use Wood To Protect Woods" Is Forest Motto

"Use wood to protect the woods," appears to be the trend in construction of forest fire lookout towers. Steel is running second as material for the protective towers.

The forest service of the U. S. Department of Agriculture has informed the Michigan department of conservation that a new consignment of 39 towers has been placed under contract with a wood manufacturing concern.

These towers are expected to be erected as part of the CCC work program throughout the country, and Michigan officials anticipate that five of the towers will be erected in this state. Cost of the towers is furnished by the CCC and labor in erecting them is supplied by CCC enrollees. The conservation department selects the sites for placing the towers.
