Opining a famous London newspaper recently, Lord Lee of Fareham was staggered to rencounter the word "diuturnity." Try as he would the hoole lord could not think what such a term could mean. Two dictionaries failed him and it was only after much inward cogitation that he wrote to the offending journal in gentle protest against the use of such obsolete locutions. Unfortunately for highway safety, there are no regular check-ups on automobile drivers, despite the fact that statistics show that more than half of all Americans have serious eyel defects by the time they reach half of all Americans have serious eyel defects by the time they reach hold of the fautomobiles. About half of the states now have some sort of eye they are not stated, and they automobiles. About half of the states now have some sort of eye tests for driver applicants, although none of such tests are very rigid according to the Better Visica institute. In some states a person actually, may be half-blind before he is required to wear spectacles when driving to protect the public. But none of the states require beriodic check-ups of drivers' eye. If automobile drivers were redwerf few years, highway safety would be increased. A person with changing eyes then would not have to run into another car to know that his eyes needed tightening up.
