

At The Redford Theater

Bringing to the screen Kenneth Robeson's adventure novel which was the largest selling book in the nation month after month, "No. 13 West Passage" opens at the Redford Theater next Monday. Young Spencer Tracy starred and Robert Young and Walter Brennan in the leading featured roles.

The picture is believed to afford Tracy, Academy Award winner of the past two years, his greatest screen role. It is reported it will be the greatest story of physical fortitude ever attempted by the screen.

Following the novel which first ran in the Saturday Evening Post before becoming a best-seller, the picture tells the story of a courageous, hardy band of Rogers' Rangers, who in 1765 set forth on a secret mission to wipe out a village of marauding Indians. Among the Rangers are Robert Young as Walker Brennan as Hank Mariner, a seasoned woodsman.

Butting against unbelievable odds, the Rangers lug heavy boats over mountains, trek for hours through treacherous swamps, cross a river torrent by forming a human chain, attack and wipe out the Indians and then start a starvation forced march home. Their ranks depleted by Indian attacks and they fight their way back to safety.

Father Stickleback Fish Protects Eggs in Nest

Man does not know at just what stage in the evolution of life parent animals begin to develop a desire to help their children through the tender and dangerous stage of their lives. We have, however, observed a few instances where the protective instinct is found in animal life as low as the fishes.

One of the most interesting and familiar illustrations is that of the stickleback, writes Frank E. Potts in Nature magazine. The males of this group build nests of waterweeds, binding them together with mucous webs or threads casted from the kidney. When satisfied with the nest, the male looks around for a mate to occupy it. If he does not succeed in attracting a mate, he resorts to force and drives away several of them—into the nest until he has a satisfactory number of eggs.

After the female deposits the eggs in the nest her responsibility for her children is over. In fact, she would enjoy eating the little fish and probably would do so except for their vigilant father. Never during the period of incubation does she make his sight, often fighting off enemies, and even the female, with the use of the stickles on his back. Not only does he guard his precious treasure but, with the use of his tail and fins, he circulates water through the nest to provide plenty of oxygen and maintain purity. In case the current spills an egg, or a young fish strays out, he rescues it and returns it to the nest.

There is a marine catfish, the gafftopsail, inhabiting the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, the male of which assumes a remarkable family responsibility. Unbelievable as it may seem, he protects the eggs during incubation by holding them in his mouth. The incubation period is a full month and the eggs nearly an inch in diameter; the male may carry at times as many as 50 in this manner, although 25 might be nearer the average. Some scientists maintain that these fish may reach a length of four inches before being thrown out from under the parental roof.

With new cottons cleverly imitating linen or wool, and rayon looking for all the world as if it had been nurtured in the silk worm's cocoon, today's shopper needs some reliable tests for fabrics on her shopping list, too.

SILK COTTON WOOL

on burns quickly, but not with a flare, and has the odor of burning paper and the gray powder ash.

Among the synthetic fabrics, we're apt to get into trouble with mixtures such as wool and rayon, and all the other combinations of pure and synthetic fabrics which are making life a none too sweet mystery these days.

Wood Burning Viscose

But, this much is reasonably safe: viscose synthetic fabrics made of pure cellulose respond to the burning test with odor of burning wood, fast burning and a gray powder, the same as linen.

The cellulose acetates, however, burn slowly, have the odor of burning wood and form a hard black bead instead of an ash.

Hare Runs Circles, Then Gives Hounds the Slip

The story of a European hare which played "rings around the rosy" with pursuing beagles is told by William H. Bennett in a recent issue of the Canadian Field Naturalist.

"An interesting experience which happened one winter in the Caledon Hills of Ontario was the loss of a hare in a cedar swamp. The hare ran for an hour's run over hilly country, the hare had entered the swamp and immediately had proceeded to make a large oval of about a mile in circumference.

"The hounds carried the line about six times around and finally came to a loss. Tracks in the snow told the story. What had happened was quite simple. The hare had completed the oval three times and was part way around for the fourth lap when, with a bound, it had left the oval and swept farthest from the hounds. The hounds had continued to run the oval until all scent had been lost.

"Time and again when a hare had been run for three hours or so and was beginning to tire, another hare would come in from the side and follow it. Invariably, after a short time, it would become aware of his plight and leave the trail of its weary neighbor. What would the hounds do? They almost always followed the newcomer, and the tired hare escaped.

"Some days we would travel 15 or 20 miles in nearly a straight line, because a hare running in a big circle would pass on its trail to another hare at the extreme of territory; and the same thing would happen repeatedly, one hare after another," says Bennett.

'Swiss Navy' & Kitcheneite

Wearied of answering questions about a barrel-like structure they are building in one of the American Airlines hangars at LaGuardia field, New York, several airplane mechanics posted a sign over it reading:

"Mock-up for submarine of Swiss Navy."

The authors of the sign enjoyed the joke thoroughly although they found that they had more questions to answer than before because of the term "mock-up," which is aviation slang for a form or pattern.

What the men are doing is building an experimental model of a transport in which it is hoped meals can be cooked. At present meals served in the air are prepared on the ground.

"We're just trying to make all our mistakes beforehand," N. K. Wilson, supervisor of passenger services for the airline company, explained, when asked about the model.

Go Window Shopping

In Your Easy Chair

Relax for a moment and turn the pages of your newspaper. Let the advertisements help you to make your shopping plans. Do you need a dress, or a coat, or a hat? Perhaps a new blanket for a guest-room, some curtain material, or even a few new pots and pans for the kitchen? Of course, there are many things you want and need... but you may be letting many of them pass until you see in a store or a window exactly what you have in mind, at an especially alluring price.

Those are the very things you will find in advertisements. Attractive articles, new and improved ones, prices that make quick action an economy. Think how many steps it can save you to hunt out these things, and find them, in comfort at home! If a special opportunity is offered, you'll know about it in time. When new articles are announced, you can have them before they are the least bit out of date. And you can save hours of waiting and asking, miles of steps—and money too!

These are but a few of the ways the advertisements in your newspaper can serve you; if you read them regularly, you are sure to grow wise in the ways of purchasing... and saving.
