CCC TO TAKE 100 MORE YOUTHS IN OAKLAND COUNTY

Farmington youths between the ages of 18 and 23 are eligible to enroll in the CCC, The Oakland County Social Welfare board announced this week that an opportunity exists now for a hundred young men in Oakland County to enroll.

The regulations regarding enrollment have been changed so as to include every young man between these ages, irrespective of his financial status, the board states.

In a CCC camp a boy lives with 200 other young men of his own age in barracks. They work and eat together. Practically all of their work is carried on outdoors, particularly in State or national forests and parks. The life is beautiful, affording many opportunities for self-improvement. Educational advantages are many and the enrollee has an opportunity to learn various trades, such as mending, welding, woodwork, radio, electricity, photography, masonry, carpentry, cooking and many other subjects.

The pay received for training in a CCC camp is $30 a month; and the enrollee has the privilege of drawing $5 for his own use. The balance of $22 may be sent to his parents or deposited with the paymaster of the camp and the total deposit then returned to the enrollee upon his final discharge from the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Any young man wishing to avail himself of the opportunities afforded a CCC enrollee may make application at 51 West Wilson avenue, Pontiac. Actual enrollment will take place the second week of October.

Astronomers Do 'Looking' With Camera, Says Doctor

This is going to break the hearts of all the amateur astronomers who ever dreamed of gazing to eye to eye with the stars in the world and ferreting out comets, stars, suns and nebulae without number.

For it seems the scholarly gentlemen who work around the Mount Wilson, Calif., telescope, whose 100-inch mirror is tops at present, turn knobs and twist screws and fiddle with gadgets—but practically never look through their huge instrument.

That is the disillusioning word Dr. Paul W. Merrill, member of the Mount Wilson observatory research staff, brings to the 1940 conference of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, held at the University of Washington.

"We don't spend any more time looking at the stars than the chemist does looking at the bottles on his shelf," the astronomer said.

"In fact, the visitors to the observatory do more looking than we do."

The observatory staff, Dr. Merrill explained, does most of its "looking" with the aid of cameras, because better work can be done and because the film can "see" farther into space than a human eye.

Tell the truth the observatory isn't more than passively interested in discovering new stars. They have enough troubles trying to find out about the ones they have now.

Right from a single star is passed through a prism to make a spectrum, Dr. Merrill explained.

And, once a spectrum has been made, the observers have a hard time of it. The light is explained. By studying the film, they know the chemical makeup of the star, its direction and speed.

Benjamin Franklin Not So Honest, Says Teacher

That Thomas P. Barnet, in one of his books dealing with technical topics explodes a belief that men like Benjamin Franklin, Patrick Henry, Robert Morris and George Washington were as honest as we would like to believe they were.

These men had deep interest in the financial returns they expected to earn from speculations in western lands and mines, he states, was the "Peer Gyn" of that period. Morris often used his official position to further advance his private interest, he points out. "The idea that Morris advanced the Revolution out of his own pocket is purely mythological," Professor Abernethy writes.

In dealing with the versatile Benjamin Franklin, the professor is distinctly an iconoclast. First of all he indicates the early interests of Franklin in the inflated land companies of that day. Franklin established a close relationship with Silas Dean, an active intriguer and also employed as his secretary, Dr. Edward Barnet, one of the best speculators in the land promotion schemes. Dr. Barnet was known at that time to be active as a British spy.

Self-Milking Cow

The first self-milking cow has been produced by a research scientist of the American Husbandry Council, Dr. Jafro Barotome devised the technique, which is based on the fundamental discoveries of the Russian physiologist Pavlov, on the formation of conditioned reflexes.

In training a cow to be a self-milker, Dr. Barotome places the milk pail in the appropriate position and simultaneously injects under the skin of the animal's back a potent substance which has the effect of relaxing the sphincter muscles, thus causing the milk to flow from all four teats at once, says the Rocky Mountain Herald. This procedure is repeated three times daily, the dosage being slowly diminished to zero.

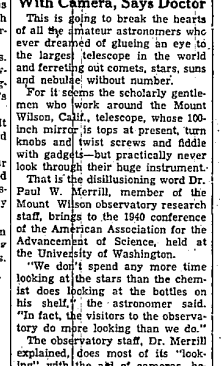

Eventually a new habit, or conditioned reflex, is established, so that the mere placing of the milk pail causes an immediate evacuation of the udder. The nature of the substance injected has not been divulged, as further research is being done in the attempt to find a selective relaxant which will act on the udder sphincters alone and not on the other sphincters.

Pituitary Extract Dangerous

In a report on paralysis in children resulting from injury of the brain at birth, Dr. George J. Garces and Dr. George W. Gustafson of Indianapolis told the section of obstetrics and gynecology that in 13 per cent of 185 cases they investigated the paralysis and brain injury were caused by the use of pituitary extract to hasten labor. "Unfortunately, pituitin is too widely used for induction and augmentation of labor in spite of continuous warnings from obstetric teachers," they said.

In contrast to other reports, their paper declared that anesthesia and the sedating drugs played little part in causing the injuries. Labor was short in the greatest number of mothers, they reported, and there is an increased tendency to injure the child at birth. The process lasts less than 12 hours. Eighty-three of the infants were delivered spontaneously, they reported, indicating that normal forces of labor may be responsible for the injuries, which in some instances might not be preventable. Many more boys than girls were injured because of their larger size at birth.

WAR BUDDIES MEET AGAIN ON SAME JOB AFTER 20 YEARS

A strange tale of how two World War buddies were reunited at the Kearny, N. J., works of the Western Electric Company twenty-one years after they first met was unfolded the other day when it was discovered that both were telephonemen and both had been working in the same plant for eleven years without having met.

Still more odd was the fact that one of them believed all these years that the other was dead, for a letter written Id France was returned to the sender marked "killed in action."

The characters in this strange incident are John L. Huck and James B. McMurdo. They first met at Camp Humphries, Va., as enlisted men in the 102nd Engineers. They formed a firm friendship, and, after being sent to Camp Merritt together, took ship for France aboard a transport with the rest of their regiment. When Huck contracted influenza shortly after his arrival at LeHarve, they were separated, as McMurdo moved up to the front line trenches. When Huck was convalescing, Huck wrote McMurdo a long letter, and it was this missive that was returned to him with the tragic "killed" line.

One evening recently, while Huck was playing tennis with the champion Merchandise team on the Kearny Works courts, the paths of the two crossed. Although employed in the same telephone plant for eleven years, they never met because McMurdo's assignment for the most part was to night duty.
