RARELY thought of as a "corn-belt" state, Michigan nevertheless ranks eleventh in the production of this biggest of American grain crops. The corn grown each year on the farms of Michigan would provide two bushels for every home in the nation.

of Michigan would provide two bushels for every home in the nation.

Whether he has a telephone or not, every farmer who gross so feeds corn benefits from the part modern telephone service plays in reporting up-to-the-minute price quotations, in the prompt delivery of seed, implements and stock, and in the process of marketing that moves his products to the consumer. All along the line, from plowing to husking, from cornerit to dinner-table, your Telephone Company helps to carry on the job of production and conservation of food—a vital link in the National Defense.
