

LOG CABIN ART REVIVED AT M.S.C. FORESTRY SCHOOL

When the circular saw of the log into use in 1820, Michigan began to lose a native art—that of log cabin construction.

So a member of the forestry faculty at Michigan State College now seeks a revival. He offers details of construction and methods of modernization of log cabins as means of retaining the art. B. Bowman, assistant professor of forestry at the college, has become somewhat an authority on the process and has even conducted extensive experiments in chinking to add to what the pioneers learned about cabin.

In a new publication, "Log Cabin Construction," Bowman considers the log cabin literally from all angles. He offers suggestions on location, design and plan; site of logs, time to cut, peeling and seasoning.

Cutting and grooving takes an international turn in preparing logs for construction. Bowman describes the Norwegian log scrub, made from a piece of spring steel and a link out of a small chain. A curved adze is another instrument, but somewhat dangerous in unskilled hands. In fact, Bowman suggests a cabin builder use a pair of sheet iron saw guards for some of the operations.

Corners go together with such matching devices as half-cut, some builders, according to Bowman, get some of their chinking done at the time the logs are fitted and spiked. A strip of oakum, impregnated, is laid between the logs. This helps in repelling air and insects and adds a tarry odor to the cabin.

The bulletin is filled with details on roofs, porches, finishes and preservatives, chinking, plumbing and furniture. Copies are available by writing the Bulletin Room, Michigan State College, East Lansing.

By allowing as much time as possible to make changes in address, readers will avoid delay or missing issues of the paper as well as costly confusion in the postoffice.

TUBERCULOSIS CONTROL PART OF NATIONAL DEFENSE

"The control of tuberculosis is an important part of National Defense," declares Dr. Paul H. Douglas, health commissioner of the City of Detroit, who was recently elected president of the National Tuberculosis Association.

This statement is part of a brief message to Michigan tuberculosis fighters which will appear in the next edition of "Health," official publication of the Michigan Tuberculosis Association, which is due off the press this week.

Dr. Douglas' complete message follows: "The maintenance of civilian health in these troublous times is an all-important part of our defense program. Not the least of the dangers which we face as regards a possible breakdown in health is the increased danger tuberculosis that exists in times of stress and strain. While this country is not at war still everyone is thinking in terms of National Defense.

"We should therefore realize that if our manpower is to be kept at its peak our present standards of health must be maintained and indeed the country would be safer were it possible for us to improve our health status.

"It is therefore necessary that we carry on even on a more intensive basis our efforts to rid ourselves of tuberculosis. Tremendous strides in this direction have been made and none of the gains should be lost.

Let us therefore carry on with an intensified program realizing that the control of tuberculosis is an important part of National Defense."

He that can have patience, can have what he will.—Franklin.

Three R's

Buy Defense Stamps

Training in democracy has been opened to all students. The school has co-operated wholeheartedly in the defense savings program and many children have purchased defense savings stamps. Students are governed by a student council composed of classmates elected by the pupils. The spirit of democracy is also carried out in extra-curricular activities such as athletics, assemblies and student dances. Class officers are named in an election which resembles closely the city, state and national elections.

Lunch Plan 'Out'

The old-fashioned lunch hall is disappearing since the school cafeteria was opened last September. Over 30,000 lunches were served in the past year. The meals are planned by girls in the home-making classes and the menus are based on the principles of food selection and the proper balance of food classes.

Movies Liven Studies

Many classes have held more interest for pupils since the introduction of visual education. From the University of Michigan film library the school has obtained silent and sound motion pictures which have been used extensively in the elementary grades and in the science classes.

Work While They Learn

Many students who plan to take jobs after graduation have received valuable training by actually working at their chosen profession while still in school. This work has been carried on through the City's Department of Business Education, under Grady McKay. Training is offered in office practice and retail selling. Next year a special co-ordinator will be provided to supervise this work.
