GIRL SCOUT NEWS

Some mighty handsome leather accessories are in the process of being made by the girls of Troop 1. At their meeting last week, they began work on purses and billfolds. And, of course, the troop is still giving time to its red cross work.

The girls of Troop 5 are learning first aid, and at their meeting this week were given instruction in first aid, and practiced bandaging. Work on three badges is in progress. In addition to first aid, home nursing is being taught one group by Mrs. Richard Erickson, while clothing badge work is being given another group by Mrs. Warren Joy, troop leader.

The Brownies of Troop 4 are up to their ears in work on the afghan, which they started last year for the red cross. Young as they are, these girls, under the leadership of Mrs. Leighton Montee, most responsible and opportunistic, lines of service with an eagerness that is an inspiration. Jane Quisenberry was a visitor at the troop meeting last week.

A program of first aid work has been launched by Troop 7. The girls met at the home of Mrs. John Hust last week and did practice bandaging and studying about burns.

Dr. James C. Magee, surgeon general, U. S. Army, confirms the findings that one per cent of the male population of military age for the country as a whole has active tuberculosis, and that at least 75 per cent of all early active tuberculosis can be discovered only by the chest X-ray examination.

Vital Metals from the Telephone Junk-pile

Worn-out, broken and outmoded telephone apparatus—even odds and ends of copper wire and lead-covered cable—are not wasted in the Bell System. Instead, at the smelting and refining plant of Bell System's Western Electric, all basic metals in the telephone junk-pile are refined for use over and over again.

That is why old telephones and other equipment may appear once more in useful form... perhaps in gun parts, big shells, fighter planes, bombers... or be used in completely new form in the telephone system of a battle cruiser or naval arsenal.

But that's not all. Bell System research enables us to save vital metals for war needs by using alternate materials in some parts of telephone equipment. That research assists us, too, in the increasingly difficult problem of providing service when and where needed.
