EARLY ELEMENTARY PUPILS ENJOY CREATIVE WORK

The pupils are glad to have Dickie Dickie, their schoolmate, back with them. Dickie was unable to attend school these last few days because he was captured and put to bed by a disease called "Whooping Cough." The kindergartners are playing a new game called "London Bridge." For their art work one group is drawing pictures with white chalk on black paper, and another is making pictures with black chalk on white paper. There are twenty-one pupils buying defense stamps and the average amount of stamp money is eight dollars and ten cents a week.

Paper snowflakes and a huge red cross decorate the bulletin board of the first grade room. The pupils cut the snowflakes out of white paper, and their teacher, Mrs. Goodman, is on a white background. This signifies that the first graders are doing their part for National Defense by contributing their pennies to the Red Cross.

Mrs. Plummer is reading a story about Eskimo life to the second graders, who are planning to use this story as a background for the project they will make soon. Each student will offer his contributions to the table which will resemble an Eskimo village described in the story.

These pupils are also illustrating by their drawing, characters from their books.

The reading course of the third graders consists of "Ways of Travel." In the back of the room, where displays are various, is a table where the pupils are writing in ink. They will keep their best copies and at the end of each month will clip them together in order to form a book at the end of the year. They will compare their papers and note the improvement. The students are quite proud of themselves, for each can recite the multiplication tables from two to six. They are learning "Winkum, Blakum, and Nod," in language class.
