Otis Named Salvage Head

Painting to copper as one of the scarcest and most critically needed metals in the nation's all-out war effort, Chairman Howard Otis of Farmington's salvage committee this week renewed his appeal to all residents of this area to collect and dispose of scrap metals in their homes, shops, offices, factories and farms.

With an estimated shortage of thousands of tons of copper required for the ensuing year, government orders have been issued restricting the use of this essential material almost exclusively to defense production.

In 1941, approximately 34 percent of the copper supply came from scrap. In 1942, it is plain that even this total will be substantially augmented by an increase in the volume of potential copper now lying unused in cellars, attics and backyards, on farms and in shops and factories.

It doesn't matter whether the articles are made of copper, he said. "Even limited amounts can be processed and used. Copper pipe and tubing, old lighting fixtures, unused or obsolete heating and plumbing supplies, broken or damaged cooking utensils—these are just a few of the brass or copper articles likely to be found in the average home."

The greatest bulk of copper now goes into brass castings for artillery, anti-aircraft and anti-tank cartridges and shells. But copper is also a vital ingredient in the production of pig-iron and ship production requires two miles of copper wire, while another type uses 500 pounds of copper per plane.

Every battleship that is launched means 2 million more pounds of copper, statistics show. And all scrap metals, rags and wastepaper are in demand by war industries. Emphasis has been placed on the fact that such materials should be sold to local waste materials dealers, or given to charitable organizations which in turn sell to dealers.

Citizens are urged to contact either Otis by phoning 1, Frank Steele at 561-32 or John Hunt at 333.

Chief AIR RAID WARDEN

Carl A. Goers has been named Chief Air Warden for Farmington, Township and City. The appointment was made by Police Chief Joseph DeVriendt, and is subject to the approval of W. B. Gambee who has jurisdiction over the entire County, in this field.

Oakland County needs 1,200 air raid wardens, declared W. B. Gambee of Farmington, Chief air warden for Oakland County, in an interview in which he urged prompt filling of this quota through the registration of volunteers in each city, village and township.

After a thorough check of the census of each municipality and township unit and taking into consideration each one according to its density of population it will require the services of 48 chief wardens and 1,200 wardens, said Gambee in outlining the needs of this division of the civilian defense program.

"The Michigan Defense Council is now working on a plan of instructions for all air wardens," Gambee continued. "We expect the cooperation of every loyal American in Oakland County." This is your war as much as it is ours.

In the city of Farmington, for example, will be required one Chief air warden and a 1st, 2nd and 3rd assistant, with 60 wardens. I am told that a number of these wardens have been signed by Farmington. If the people of Farmington will only stop and realize that Farmington lays in the path of the invader, and that this community can render a valuable service in time of emergency, and that a number of the tremendous amount of war material is being manufactured here, we will qualify for all the air wardens we need.
