needed by that person to perform his work or operations, (3) the skill he applies to the work, (4) flexibility in shifting workers to places where they are most needed, and (5) the need to avoid population congestion. All of it may be summed up in the words of the President: "The right worker . . . in the right place . . . at the right time."

Point Rationing Permits Choice of rationing. In the general policy of wartime rationing, especially in the general rationing program, designed to give all of us a fair share of scarce commodities. If the new "point" system of rationing appears at first glance to be more complicated than the familiar "unit" coupon rationing, it should be remembered that the coupon method, while well adapted to rationing such products as sugar and coffee, which can be divided up on a simple per capita basis, is not suitable for rationing diversified foodstuffs. Tastes vary quite as much as do supplies, and not all persons want the same items in their daily diet. Point rationing allows the consumer a wide range of choice.

If, merely by way of example, a shortage should develop in canned fruit juices, because of shipments abroad, it might happen that canned citrus juices would be scarce while canned tomato juices remained plentiful. Under such circumstances, citrus juices would have a higher point value than tomato juice, and the consumer could then choose between using up more points in buying canned grapefruit juice, or "spreading" his points by selecting tomato juice.

The Pierson P.T.A. donated $10 to the Junior Red Cross to buy wool, of which they are making Afghans for the soldiers in the hospitals. They are also making woolen lap robes, for the convalescing soldiers, out of four and one half squares made out of woolen material donated by the community.

Homer Middlewood, who is on an island in the South Pacific, writes home that he was somewhat disturbed by an article he happened to come across in an old magazine, about the strikes in Michigan, and reminds us that none of his buddies, nor he, have had "even half a day off" since landing on the spot he is on and suggests that these men who are bickering and refuse to work for $10 or so a day be sent to where he is. He feels that it is the perfect spot in which to get a different slant on life and that it won't be money they will be worrying about.

Because of the lack of any conveniences, including stationary and Christmas cards, Homer Middlewood has sent unusual greetings to his family, some made from used V mail stationery. Howard Middlewood's family received a card made from parts of a blotter and bits of other cards sent to him previously.

This War Christmas...

PLEASE do not make Long Distance greeting calls

Only the necessities of war cause your Telephone Company to make that request. This Christmas, Long Distance lines will be crowded with urgent war messages—calls that must go through. Holiday greetings must make way for those vital calls.

Therefore, we sincerely ask that you do not make Long Distance greeting calls on Christmas Eve and Christmas Day, particularly to points outside of Michigan.
