'Impossible'

By DUFORD JENNE

McClure Syndicate—WNU Features.

THE words followed Mary to her room like a doom-laden sentence. In going down the hall of the boarding house she had passed Edith Lyman's room, and the door had been ajar. A group of girls were evidently discussing with Edith, who was a leader among them, some party plans for the evening; and Edith had said:

"Oh, we can't ask Mary! Ted wouldn't go with her—she's impossible!"

That was all Mary heard, but it was enough. She closed her door and stood in stria-like silence, "Impossible"—how the word rang in her ears!

She was almost on the verge of tears when there was a knock on the door. She hastily controlled herself, and Edith stuck her bright head into the room.

"Hello, Mary, we're going out to a dance tonight and couldn't you go?"

Mary's heart skipped a beat, but she was almost on the point of saying, "No," for she knew she was being asked just to "fill in." But she was hungry to get away from the drab routine of her days, and said heartily: "Yes, I'd love to go, Edith."

"O. K. then, Mary. Ted will take you."

Mary sat still a moment—Ted, one of the most welcome of the boys who came to the house, whose kindly, attractive face always had a pleasant smile for Mary.

She dressed as carefully as she could, and she was ready when Ted came.

On the journey to the dance hall, through the crowded subway, Ted's kindness and thoughtfulness pleased Mary, and she was sure some of the shill the "impossible" had left.

At the hall, she entered into the spirit of the evening with all her heart, warping herself that this chance might not come again.

When the evening was over, however, Ted had left her with a kindly good-night and in the silence of her room she "looked back" she was aware that she had shown no more than courteous interest in her.

"And I was so happy with him! If he would only ask me again!" she whispered to herself.

But he didn't, not that week-end, not the next, and in the meantime Mary brooded on the word that had condemned her so simply.

Finally, in desperation, she went to motherly old Mrs. Ober, who worked in some dressmaking shop, and told her the whole story.

Mrs. Ober listened, and said gently:

"Then, listen, my dear. Every girl has something of charm about her; and it is her duty to study in every way she can to bring it out. Now, your own dresses ought to be changed; it's not a matter of cost but of right choice. You see, some women have a gift for figuring such things out; and some haven't. Now, it's my business to help those who haven't; and suppose we see what we can do?"

Mary's eager agreement made the older woman smile, and they went ahead, with their plans.

So the day came when Mary, while Mrs. Ober looked on with interested eyes, faced herself in her mirror in a real party dress. She was amazed at the change. Her bobbed hair had been changed in such a way as to bring out the oval of her face and the curve of her slim neck; and the dress, simple enough in design, did the rest.

"You see?" Mrs. Ober said, and Mary turned and rushed into her room.

Things seemed to happen after that. She was hurrying down the hall to Mrs. Ober's room for the purpose of having a small change made in the dress when she met Ted at the top of the stairs. He looked at her with sudden, keen interest.

"Hello, Mary. I hardly knew you! What is that—a new dress?" he asked with frank admiration in his eyes.

His glance set something to singing within her. "A real party dress!" she announced, as she slipped by.

Then came Edith's comment later on. "Midget, where did you get that bob?" It was the work of an artist. Then, happy of all things, Ted with his own invitation to join him and his own special group at an evening dance.

It was in the quiet of one of the alcoves of the beautiful room on the side the dance floor that he turned to her. "Mary, you are the same girl and yet you aren't, and I can't figure out what has made the difference. You remember I enjoyed having you with me then, but I feel now as if it were almost somebody else." He was smiling, but his ways were frank and he could not hide his puzzled thought.

Mary was chancing to herself, "I won't be Jonesome any more," but she said to him: "The reason—oh, only a woman's knot! But you don't think I'm 'impossible'?"

He caught her hand in a tense grasp. "Impossible!—I should say not—and it's going to take a darned good man to get you away from me!" he said with decision.

Each of the Indian states has its own Indian ruler, whose powers are defined by a separate treaty with the British crown. These rulers have control of all internal matters within their respective states but have no authority to deal with external affairs.

GOOD LIGHT COLOR CONTRAST to boost PRODUCTION in war plants!

Skilled workers can produce only as well and efficiently as they can SEE. That is why GOOD LIGHT is so important in war plants. Machine output depends in large degree on the speed and accuracy of machine operators, and seeing must be clear, sharp, effortless. GOOD LIGHTING helps to make it so.

But there is another production tool almost as important as good lighting, and that is COLOR CONTRAST. Machines in factories are often painted a drab green, deep gray or black, blending into a dark solid mass. This—combined with dull walls, floors and ceilings—makes seeing difficult even under large amounts of illumination. Valuable light is "blotted up" and much of it wasted. There is no contrast between the machine and the work, between a gray stamping and a gray press. Eyes strain to see, hands are slowed down, hazards are multiplied.

A paint brush provides a simple and inexpensive solution. By painting the working areas of machines a lighter color, CONTRAST is provided between the work and the background, making it easy to see. And because eyes are instantly attracted to the bright spot, the lighter color "spotlights" the danger area—the point of work—and accident hazards are automatically reduced.

Detroit Edison Lighting Advisors will be glad to advise you on the combined use of LIGHT and COLOR CONTRAST to boost production in your plant. Call RA 2100, Lighting Division. The Detroit Edison Company.
