Kursk, Russia's Fruit Region, Kursk, springboard for Germany's latest attack on Russia's central front, is in peacetime headquarters for a fruit region as famous to Russians for its apples as Florida and California are to Americans for their oranges and grapefruit.

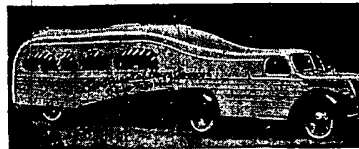

A bulletin from the National Geographic society. The Russians failed in their winter attempt to recapture the city which is an important junction on the railroad running from Moscow to Sevastopol.

Kursk, equal in size to Charlotte, N.C., is about 280 miles south of Moscow and 125 miles north of Kharkov. It lies almost at the midpoint between Moscow and the Black sea.

To Christ days, tales of a magazine phenomenon near Kursk were regarded as mere fantasy. During the Russian revolution, while the Kursk region was a hotbed of fighting from the Soviet scientists began to investigate the area. Vast deposits of iron ore were discovered there in 1922 and Kursk since has become the center of a large iron industry.

The Kursk with a population of 102,000 would not fit in with American conceptions of a modern metropolis.

PONCA CITY, OKLA.

THE 101 RANCH

In northern Oklahoma, back in the early 70's there was a vast domain of government land known as the Cherokee Strip. Rich with grass and later to be dotted with oil wells, this vast domain was a cattleman's paradise. Huge tracts were leased from the government for the princely sum of from two to five cents per acre.

Great herds of cattle were driven from Texas over the Cherokee Trail and pastured on the leased land. Temporary headquarters were set up in convenient spots and cowboys roamed the countryside.

Into this setting in 1878 came Col. George Miller, one of the outstanding pioneers and cattlemen of that day. Col. Miller began his operations in the established manner—by leasing land from the government.

But when the Cherokee Strip was opened to settlement in 1893 the Colonel's organization was not disbanded as were so many others of that period. Instead, he established permanent headquarters nine miles southwest of this enterprising city.

Miller bought up large tracts of land from the Ponca and Otoe Indians. In so doing, he built not only a successful business but also one of the great cattle ranches of all time, the 110,000 acre showplace of the southwest that attracted over 100,000 visitors annually—the 101 Ranch.

The story of this ranch is a tale of accomplishment over a period of 50 years. In the beginning it meant forming friendly relations with the Indians and it is said that the Colonel and his succeeding heirs did more for the Indians than all the Government agencies combined.

It meant constant changing to keep abreast of the times. This too, was accomplished as the years went by the ranch graduated from the strict cattle and horse raising and became a diversified. Hundreds of miles of fences were built. The strains of range cattle gave way to purebred herds. A modern dairy was installed with 500 cows milked by electricity. Other improvements included an ice-cream plant, a packing house, cold storage plant, a cannery, an electric lighting plant, hundreds of houses for the workmen, and even a complete oil refinery.

The ranch maintained the largest herd of purebred Duroc-Jersey hogs in the world and the largest herds of purebred registered Holstein and Shorthorn cattle in America. It boasted an apple orchard that produced thousands of bushels of apples annually. The three sons of the Col. who took over the management after the Col.'s death also developed two new breeds of cattle, one by crossing the buffalo with the common cow and the other by crossing the buffalo with the Brahman, the sacred cow of India.

Chief among the accomplishments of the famous brothers was the 101 Ranch Real Wild West Show. If you are over the age of 50 this show will need no introduction. It was organized in 1906 and played throughout the world. In 1914 when the World War broke out the show was in England. Out necessity it was disbanded at that time and for 10 years remained off the road.

All of the above is history for now the 101 Ranch is no more. A considerable portion of the property has been acquired by the Government Reclamation Administration and cut up into small farms. The big white house that was the family residence and headquarters still stands by the side of the road, but now it is empty and weeds grow in the yard and glassed windows no more reflect the setting sun. One of the great showplaces of the southwest has gone the way of the buffalo and the Indian.

Eye Dominance
Three out of four persons, studies indicate, have one eye which does most of the seeing, with the other eye hanging along. This is known as eye dominance. Surveys have shown that automobile drivers are prone to accidents on the side of the weak eye. Persons with a lagged right eye, for example, are likely to side-swipe another car when passing or cutting in.

"Go to it! 10% by New Year's!"

You wouldn't paint piano keys mahogany—

Why CAMOUFLAGE your factory machines?

Piano keys would be difficult to see if they were painted mahogany or walnut, in the same shade as the rest of the piano. But a white and black keyboard provides perfect CONTRAST to make seeing easy and guide fingers quickly and surely.

Why isn't color contrast a good idea for FACTORY MACHINES, where output depends on nimble fingers and the speed and accuracy of machine operators? Actual tests made in industrial plants show that the theory really works: production is increased, errors are cut to a minimum, and improved vision greatly reduces accident hazards.

How is all this accomplished? First, by removing the solid drab color that cloaks most factory machines—the monotonous dull green or gray or black that blends areas from the worker's eyes. (Painting the "danger area" a lighter color provides sharp contrast between the machine and the metal being fabricated.) Second, brightening drab walls and floors and ceilings with a light-colored paint to banish gloomy interiors. Third, furnishing GOOD LIGHT to assure speedy, accurate vision and guide hands safely in their tasks.

For the most effective use of light and color contrast in your plant, let our Detroit Edison Lighting Advisors help you. There is no charge for their services. Call RA 2100, Lighting Division. The Detroit Edison Company.
