THE GARDEN PATH

Many people feel that "morale" is a much overworked word today. But it describes as no other word can, the flower garden that are being grown by gardeners all over the nation, to provide flowers to cheer the lonely and the sick—food for the soul.

Many people in their Victory Gardens are growing combinations of vegetables and flowers, with vegetables of course predominating. And the combination is pleasing as well as practical. In some gardens I have seen rows of radishes and flowers. In others, flowers have been used as a border around the vegetable garden.

The space you have to devote to the garden and the needs of your family will govern how much space you can afford to give to flowers. In every Victory Garden should have at least a few flowers. The lift they give to the spirit justifies the time and space required.

Years ago it was a very common practice for home gardeners and orchardists to dry their surplus produce for winter use. One of the children's favorite snacks was a handful of dried apples. But as canning equipment became more readily available and vegetable cookers came into vogue, gradually the preservation of fruits and vegetables through drying was discontinued in the home.

Now that the shortage of sugar, fuel, containers, lids and jar rubbers offers so many obstacles to canning, we again find it necessary to fall back on the practice of drying surplus fruits and vegetables, both in the home and commercially. You are going to hear a great deal about the process commercially, known as dehydration. There will probably be a large increase in the volume of sales on dehydrated foods. The following booklets are instructive and helpful.

"Drying Fruits and Vegetables in the Home," Extension Bulletin No. 153, Revised June, 1938. Free through Extension Service, State College of Washington, Pullman, Wash.

Quick Trick for a Busy Evening

Egg white fluffed into a crisp, delicate meringue gives this version of eggs on toast a refreshing sense of novelty. The use of toast—crisp white bread—adds vitamins, proteins and substantial food value.

by Kathrine Wellingsbrook

EGG RECIPES, QUICK to prepare, are a blessing to the war-torn homemaker. Enriched white bread helps to budget eggs... builds up bulk and protein value. Use it in the form of crumbs, or as toast—its proteins are classed as "good," and it supplies a valuable share of B vitamins and minerals.

Bread Not "Fattening"
The addition of bread doesn't mean that any extra "fattening" calories are being added to your day's quota; you could eat 12 slices of bread a day without gaining weight. The rest of your quota was properly assembled for it's the sum total of all the food you eat, that counts.

Egg-in-A-Cloud
Spread a slice of enriched white bread with softened butter or bacon drippings. Separate yolk and white of egg; add pinch of salt to white; beat until stiff. Heap lightly on slice of bread; make indentation in center and slip in egg yolk. Bake in moderate oven (350°F) until egg white is lightly browned. Dust top of egg with paprika. Serve for luncheon or supper with two fresh vegetables.

A ONE DISH MEAL
WILL SIMPLIFY
SUMMER MENUS

Here is a main dish—one dish meal, easy and quick to prepare.

- 1 cup macaroni
- 3 cups green beans
- 3 cups corn
- 3 cups tomato sauce
- 1/2 cup salt
- 1/2 cup pepper
- 1/2 cup Worcestershire sauce
- 1/2 cup oil
- 2 cups milk
- 1 cup minced onion
- 1/2 cup grated cheese
- 2 cups cooked cut green beans

Cook macaroni in boiling, salted water until tender. Drain. Run cold water over it. Drain again and place in a buttered 3-quart casserole. Melt butter in a saucepan, blend in flour, mustard, salt, pepper and Worcestershire sauce. Add milk, stirring constantly. Cook until thickened. Add onion and 1/2 cup cheese. Stir until cheese is melted. Add green beans, pour over macaroni and mix well. Top with remaining 1/2 cup cheese. Bake for 45 minutes in 350 degree oven.

THIS AND THAT

I finally had to give in to a phobia of years standing—papers on the floor—but just had to in order to keep the rugs in the kitchen clean for longer than one day.

They say there is no satisfying we humans—right now we are praying for the rain to cease—and about six weeks hence we'll be offering up prayers to relieve the dry spells.

I think little boys have special grime—ones who dump water in boots, spill milk, dirty clothes, muss hair, etc.

The next time we have roast chicken—and it tastes like duck—I'll blame that on the weather too. They have taken to the puddles like an old duck.

Furiously how the dawn will minimize (boobies).

All Out For Freedom—Marion Rhoads. Every war has produced its heroes and written its stories. This book is a group of hero stories that have taken place during the present war, none of them having been written before 1942.

The selections included have been chosen chiefly for their story interest and variety. A large number of the stories are about planes—the bombing of Japanese ships in the Pacific, dog-fighting in the skies of China with the famous Flying Tigers, the first spectacular flight over Tokyo, the organization of a large-scale bombing raid. Here are the experiences of dropping through the skies by parachute, of night fighting, of a fiery pilot's encounter with a torpedo, of a wounded R.A.F. pilot, of what it feels like to be bombed by Stukas. But plane stories do not entirely steal the show, there are the ones about submarine warfare, of gallant ground fighting, of the daring deeds of the Commandos, of tank testing and stories from the home front production and of scrap. A most interesting book.

The Uninvited—Dorothy Macardie. One exuberant April morning Roderick Fitzgerald and his sister Pamela were exploring the famous cliffs of North Devon in search of a house. An alluring gorse-lined smugglers lane led them to the derelict but beautiful Cliff End, untenanted for fifteen years. The owner spoke vaguely of "disturbances" the last tenants had experienced. "A story like that will be quite an attraction to my sister," Roderick told Commander Brooke, and on the nineteenth of April, Cliff End became the property of the Fitzgeralds.

That's about as much of the story as can be told without spoiling for the reader the impact of the extraordinary events of that summer. There was the gossip in Biddelcombe; there was the gay housewarming party at which the uninvited made their presence known.

One World—Wendell L. Wilkie. In this book Wendell Wilkie gives a highly personal account of his meetings with Stalin, Chiang Kai-shek, General Montgomery, General Chennault and other United Nations leaders. He tells of his talks with prime ministers and kings, and with teachers, soldiers, librarians, factory workers and farmers around the world. He reports a great awakening that is going on among the peoples of the world and his deep conviction that the United Nations must learn to work together, while they fight, if they hope to live together after the war is over.

Mr. Wilkie left Mitchell Field on August 26, 1942 in a Liberator bomber known as "Gulliver." It was converted for transport service and operated by U. S. Army officers. His purpose was to see what he could do for the world and the war, its battle fronts, its leaders and its peoples. Forty-nine days and 31,600 miles later he landed at Minneapolis. "One World" gives a personal account of that trip. It is certainly one of the most courageous and outspoken books ever written by a great public figure.

Night Boat and Other Tod Moran Mysteries—Howard Pease. Being personally acquainted with a sea captain and his first mate gave the author the opportunity to spend endless hours listening to colorful tales from the lips of the men who had themselves experienced strange adventures at sea and in port. These he has collected and written down in a dramatic book for adventure and mystery-loving readers.

There is the story of revolt in Caracas when President Gomez dies and Tod discovers a woman and child in the rumble seat of his car—the father of a hated tyrant of the city. There is a tale of today, of San Francisco in a black-out and Tod searching frantically to relocate a cry for help somewhere in a block of darkened homes. Behind one of their doors Tod knows there is trouble, but his inquiries are met with suspicion and denial. What Tod finds when he tries to fathom the mystery is vividly told by Howard Pease.

"Could we only draw the curtains That surrounds each other's lives, See the naked heart and spirit, Know what your the action gives, Often we should find it better, Purer than we judged we should, We should love each other better, If we only understood."

THE purpose of your telephone directory is to give you, quickly and easily, the number of almost any nearby telephone you wish to call. Yet six out of ten calls to "Information" are for numbers that could be found by looking in the directory!

In Michigan those needless calls increase the load on war-busy central office equipment by 1,180 hours of operators' time each day!

We're at sea, and we must keep the telephone system clear for vital war calls. In normal times we would add new equipment to handle the increased load. That can't be done today because the needed materials have gone to the fighting fronts.

Please, before you ask "Information" for a number—look in the directory.

If it isn't listed and you must call "Information," write the number down so you'll have it next time.
