Ancient Defense Measure

Sir George Macdonald, Edinburgh, president of the Society of Antiquaries, in a talk to St. Andrew's prehistorians on Roman Scotland, made reference to their ingenious methods of fortification, reports the Montreal Gazette. One interesting relic, he said, was an example of an old defensive device. The Romans made holes in the ground around their forts and put in sharp spikes, which were covered over with brushwood. When the invaders rushed into the trap they were thrown into confusion and provided easy targets for missiles thrown from the ramparts. A similar device was used by Julius Caesar and Robert the Bruce, and also in the Russian-Japanese war and in the Western front in the Great war.

Acid Soils
Very acid soils, according to current thought among soil scientists, are of low productivity not because of the acid present, but rather because, in general, the high acidity indicates a low level of available calcium, magnesium and potassium, particularly potassium.

Limiting a soil has two principal effects, reducing the acidity and increasing the supply of calcium which is important to the growth of plants. In highly acid soils the activity of the micro-organisms is greatly depressed, in unfavorable conditions affecting particularly the nitrogen-fixing organisms. Also, the phosphorus available to plants decreases, as the acidity of the soil increases in some highly acid soils other elements, such as aluminum and manganese, may become injurious to plants.

Seeds in Cloth
Scientists in India who worked on the problem of harm cloving for the growing Indian army discovered a process of treating cotton cloth with the seeds of two native trees, and have produced a finished product that is warm, soft, and durable.
