"TRAILER VAGABOND"

By WARREN BAYLEN

BISBEE, ARIZONA

There's nothing unusual about a town with a street three miles long but if that same town is only ONE STREET WIDE it's astonishing. Such a town is Bisbee, located in the desert hills of the southern part of Arizona.

Picture it for yourself. Back in the beginning a copper mine was discovered in a narrow canyon winding through the hills. As this mine was developed, workers, because of poor transportation, were forced to live as close as possible to their work. As the canyon walls were very steep, expansion in that direction was impossible. A few hardy souls did manage to prop up homes on the hill sides, but the major portion followed the easier route and built next to their neighbors on the canyon floor.

As the mine developed, more and more workers were needed. Each followed the pattern laid out by his predecessor and built farther up the canyon. Today the town boasts the longest mile street in the world for a community its size. 35,000 people live on one street 12 miles long and one block wide.

With copper at 12 cents a pound, the city today is a prosperous community thriving on the rearmament program. It's peaceful but wasn't always so. Its side street was of the fiery Gulch. Tombstone Canyon and O.K. Street give you some idea of its early days. Only 25 miles away is Tombstone. "The town so tough it wouldn't die."

The present site of Bisbee was first explored in 1877. Ben Williams sent some specimens to his brother-in-law, Judge Bisbee in San Francisco. The judge promptly took out options on the mine and named it "The Copper Queen." The town was named after him.

In November, 1880, production began and one bar of bullion was obtained from every four tons of slag. In its first year the Copper Queen's rich deposits gave up ore averaging 24 1/2 per cent pure copper. Expansion made it the second largest copper mine in the world.

In the past half century the hills that surround Bisbee have disgorged one billion dollars worth of precious metals.

The most remarkable part of local mining operations is Sacramento Hill, dominating the town and frowning down on Bisbee's one, long street. The mountain is HOLLOW.

200 feet higher than it is today, in 1917 a gigantic charge of dynamite blasted away its peak. Steam shovels began to eat its copper laden ore away and continued to excavate until the inside of the mountain was dug out. The hole is tremendous. You can stand in one direction and 1,200 ft. in another, it drops down 435 feet.

Between June and November, 1929, 20,843,667 tons of ore were removed from an area of 35 acres but this section of the mining operations is abandoned today.

A few miles out of town is the place where Coronado and his Spanish soldiers first crossed into this country, 400 years ago. Congress has appropriated money for the erection of an International Monument and Park to commemorate this historic event.
