Overseas Bus Trailer
As one answer to the problem of transporting hundreds of thousands of war workers from central points representatives of the Office of Defense Transportation, with the aid of officials of the War Production Administration, a member of private companies, have designed and built in less than 30 days a simplified type of overseas bus trailer made almost entirely of non-critical materials. The trailer has a seating capacity nearly three times that of an ordinary city bus and nearly twice that of the largest type of street car.

Hauled by an ordinary 1 1/2-ton truck tractor, the trailer has just arrived in Washington, after a 30-hour trip from the Indiana factory where it was completed recently.

Thousands of tons of
ARMOR PLATE
for tanks and ships and guns—

... another job Electricity is doing to help win the war

A white-hot ingot of steel weighing several tons shoots along on conveyors in the rolling mill, passing between giant rolls that squeeze it to the desired shape. The whole operation is mechanical: Powerful electric motors turn the rollers that guide the steel on its way.
Electric motors of five thousand horsepower operate the huge sheet mills and the great "flying shears" that snap off chunks of steel like paper.

Electricity opens and closes the doors of the open-hearth furnaces where the molten steel is refined. Electricity operates the furnace fans and valves and a variety of auxiliary equipment. Electricity runs the 125-ton crane. Electricity picks up the 175-ton ladle that pours the molten steel into molds. Electricity drives the 200-ton "stripper," which lifts the mold in a pair of giant "ice-tongs" and punches the ingot from the mold with a huge plunger.

Without electric power, the flow of armor plate for today's tanks and ships and guns would be only a dribble. This is just one more job that electricity is doing to help win the war. The Detroit Edison Company.
