

Luxury Bathroom Center

CRYSTAL CHANDELIERS and cupids grace this model Ultra Bath by American Standard. A survey revealed that most women consider a bath a ritual—a private time away from the daily routine and hectic demands of family and the world outside.

Two-Seaters Go Glamorous

The two-seater is back.

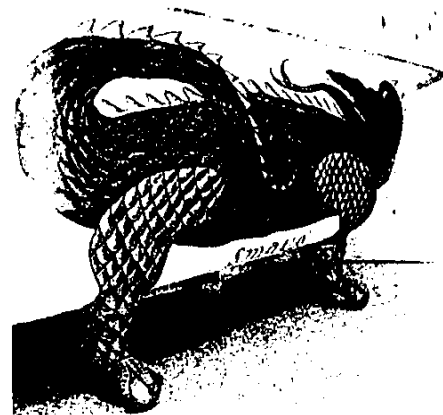

The two-seater at Grandfather's farm was at the end of a path that led past the mulberry tree. It was a respectable distance from the house.

In the spring, when the yellow currant bushes that surrounded the little out-building were in bloom, it was a pleasant place to sit and admire the decor. The walls were papered with a fascinating assortment of leftover wall-papers.

In summer, hornets and yellow jackets made the trips brief and a little terrifying. In winter, the jaunts were understandably brief.

The first indoor plumbing, with the claw-footed bathtub and toilets with overhead flush boxes, was pure white. This is explained as an emotional need for clean, aseptic, hospital-like white in the days when sanitation was a problem.

Now the two seater is back. They are available in many colors, also bone and white. They come equipped with a vacuum-type ventilator that "eliminates toilet odors before they become bathroom odors."

EARLY VINTAGE TUBS—Some cover them with wallpaper and some decorate them with posies. Schoolcraft College composer-in-residence Robert Jones and his wife Ann came up with this novel idea. Theirs has become the story book dragon, "Smaug."

The bath tub has become a "bath pool."

Temperature and depth of water may be pre-selected. There is also a timing mechanism and turbulator, which activate the therapeutic whirlpool. There are built-in storage shelves for soaps, bath oils and other bathing-showering items. A fold-down tray holds a book, magazine or manicure equipment.

There are two shower heads.

A hideaway hand spray may be used for shampooing the hair, bathing children, or even the family dog.
