STATE COLLEGES WILL TRAIN WOMEN TO FARM
A special four weeks short course designed to train members of the Women's Land Army for year-round farm work will be offered at Michigan State College this fall, September 27 to October 22. Ralph W. Penny, Director of Short Courses, announces.

Open to non-farm women and farm women who needed on their own farms, the course will be sponsored jointly by Michigan State College, the State Board of Control for Vocational Education, and the Emergency Farm Labor Program of the college extension service, with the college and the vocational education board cooperating to pay the costs of instruction, and the Emergency Farm Labor program furnishing student charges and costs of room and board.

With the objective of fitting women to play an important part in wartime agriculture as they now play in industry, emphasis will be placed on practical instruction by the college staff in farm practices, with full use being made of college herds, flocks, farms and laboratories for teaching on a "do-ing" basis.

AN OPEN NOTE TO HOUSEWIVES EVERYWHERE

Dear Madam

Perhaps you remember the flat iron that Grandmother used. She heated it on the kitchen stove and proceeded to do up a really big ironing. She used a little more time and muscle than the later day electric iron called for, but she got results.

Today, you can no longer purchase the electric iron. And a lot of you have wished that the good old word of Grandmother's day was still about the house.

Well, here it is, just 300 of them, so it's a matter of first come, first served. We cannot take phone orders or hold any irons. Better get here early.
