Force of Sea Waves.

Sor, c idea of the tremendous force possessed or exorted by sea waves may be formed by the fact that an iron column, twenty-three feet long and weighing some 6,000 pounds—part of a new lighthouse being built—was, in the curse of operations, landed at Bisho's Rock, England, and, a storm doming up, was left lashed by a half-inch plain at each end to strong eye-tolist. Three days afterward it was found on examination, that the great column had been tossed up by the waves a distance of some twenty feet to thi top of the rock, where it was sawying about like a piece of timber. Two days afterward, when the workmen tiero able to land, it was found that a blacksmitth's anvil, weighing 150 ppunds, which had been 16ft in a hole firee and one-half feet in diameter, had also been washed by the wavee comprehended. also been washed by the wavee pletely ou Science
