Scratching Dogs
Ninety per cent of the itching and scratching of dogs is caused, not by diet, mange or fleas, but a common fungus, which dogs pick up from grass.
In many animals it first appears between the toes, spreading to the flanks and back. The rash may appear as sand-draft-like scales or merely roughened, irritated skin. Scratching causes the skin to break into open sores. Brownish discoloration of the hair is a definite symptom of fungus.

Powdered Nylon
Nylon as a plastic will come to the fore in the postwar era. A newly developed form will be available in powder form which manufacturers will melt at high temperature and inject into molds to produce lightweight objects of toughness and resiliency.

Vitamin Losses
From 42 to 56 per cent of vitamin B1 in canned meats is lost during the processing operations, according to findings of Canadian scientists E. J. Redman and L. Buckley.

It was found possible, however, to fortify the packs with synthetic thiamine to a level equal to, or above, that of raw meats.

Save Sugar, Shortening
Here's a way to save a little sugar and shortening. Whenever they're obtainable, use paper baking cups for cakes. These require no greasing and, by leaving the cakes in the cups, frosting is necessary only for the tops.

off duty four hours, throughout the day and night. You are allowed five days' liberty each month. Grade Sam throws in the air-conditioning free, for there's always a fine breeze and nary a mosquito, although plenty of flies and spiders.

Each man in this lighthouse cooks his own meals. Radio reception is good as the station serves as a radio beacon for lake shipping and the government has installed super-super equipment, the best money can buy.

During fogs an air-compressed horn moans incessantly. "But you get used to it," opined Jones, the keeper, "although it does get a bit monotonous after a day or two."

We had just left old Fort Drummond, once teeming with activity of some 350 to 400 red-coated British soldiers from 1815 to 1828. In their first winter there, following evacuation of Fort Mackinac by the Americans, many soldiers died from scurvy due to improper diet.

A week's rations in the winter of 1815-16 consisted of four pounds of salt pork, six ounces of rice, six ounces of butter (usually rancid because of its age), seven pounds of flour and three pounds of dried peas. Hardly a vitamin in the batch!

Little wonder then that Lt. Col. McDonald, British commanding officer, dispatched an appeal to Fort Mackinac for food and medical supplies. The Americans responded with generosity, sending along an army surgeon for good measure.

Gazing out upon blue Lake Huron, we recalled how over these same waters once traveled the birch-bark canoes of Indians to Fort Drummond. Today the long slender ore boats—some of them valued at $2,000,000 each—set their course up and down the Detroit passage of the St. Mary's river by the radio beacon, revolving lighted for horn of the Detroit lighthouse.

Thus the new follows the old—like life itself.
Yet the new acquires additional value and significance when it is contrasted with the old. Such is the simple lesson taught by history.

Old Fort Drummond, now disappearing into the earth, should be acquired by the State of Michigan and restored to its original glory. The last British fort in Michigan during the days when two nations were struggling for supremacy of the Indian fur trade of the Great Lakes.

Digitalis Industry
Digitalis belongs to the foxglove family and is a biennial sometimes grown as an ornamental plant. The young plants are started in greenhouses and transplanted to outdoor seed beds and later to fields. Growers are producing the crop under contract basis for medical houses.
