(Continued from Page Two) lodges would benefit them," asserted Woodfill. "Private operators are not going to invest funds to the extent of assuring buildings and facilities suitable for these regimens. The state should bridge this gap by constructing high-class attractive lodges and then leasing them to private operators, subject to regulations safeguarding the interests of the public."

That the Upper Peninsula must possess better tourist facilities if it expects to get and to retain tourist business is the firm conviction held by Woodfill whose experience in hotel operation extends over a quarter of a century.

State-owned hotels at the Cupinas, Tahquamenon Falls, and perhaps Glen Lake would do more to boost Michigan's tourist business than a substantial amount of promotional ballyhoo. This sentiment, expressed by the Mackinac Island hotel proprietor, has found a warm approval among other hotel men. It is significant also that the state conservation department director, P. J. Hoffmaster, is friendly and sympathetic to this solution.

These two trends—scientific research into fish conservation and state-ownership of key resort hotels at state-owned scenic spots are due to receive increasing favor.
