Suds Cleanse
There are many types of bluing. Most of them are used in clear cool water and serve as a final rinse. There is also a kind which is used in the first sud. Whichever you use, the point to remember is that the cleansing is performed by suds. Clothes will not have the sparkle that makes a woman proud of her work unless soil is removed by adequate washing with soap and water. If clothes are blued after washing, they should have at least two preliminary clear-water rinses. If not blued, both white and colored clothes should be given a third clear-water rinse.

Aluminum Shingles
Replacement of wooden shingles by cheap aluminum and glass products is a promising development.

THE CONTROL OF GERMANY AND JAPAN — Harold G. Moulton and Louis Marlio. The victorious nations will be confronted after the war with two distinct though related problems. The first and crucial task in the generation following the war will be to prevent Germany and Japan from again rearming. The second will be to devise a general international organization which will facilitate the adjustment of international problems of common interest, and which may ultimately become an instrument for the enforcement of peace throughout the world. This study is a comprehensive analysis of the first of these problems.

Current discussions of the enforcement of peace utterly center on economic control devices. It has been hoped that by such means peace might be effectively maintained at a relatively small cost and without bloodshed. Consequently, the study explored these possibilities extensively, separate consideration being given to Germany and to Japan. The results that might be expected not only from control of raw material imports but also from direct control of key industries are analyzed. The authors consider the possibilities of control by dismemberment of enemy countries or by other boundary rearrangements. In the end, the authors find that control by military force is the only effective means of check on aggression. It will be less costly, less difficult, and less disturbing to economic conditions both inside and outside the controlled countries.

The analysis which precedes this conclusion provides a comprehensive treatment of the major problems involved in making sure that the nations responsible for starting the present world conflict are not able to repeat it within the foreseeable future.
