2 ornamental lamps . . . 6,000 lumens each
28 ornamental lamps . . . 10,000 lumens each
171 lamps totaling . . . 422,600 lumens

Once upon a time Caro had in its street lighting system a few lamps that were an interesting variation on the familiar street light of today . . . Experts reasoned that since horses had eyes, and that newcomer on the road—the automobile—had headlights, it was unnecessary to extend street lights out over the road. So they turned them in over the sidewalk! Then came the age of speed — and the end of the picturesque sidewalk lamp.

Today Caro's street lighting, rebuilt completely by Detroit Edison in 1939, is widely known for its modern, scientific excellence. Directional luminaires aim the light down where it will do the most good, making the streets safe and friendly.

How is the street lighting in YOUR community? Our engineers will be glad to discuss a postwar plan now.
