of the seven rooms had depended upon the central heating plant for warmth on winter nights.

Not all of the buildings on High

Island were constructed by King Ben's followers. A half century ago the Indians resided there, and the Roman Catholic church maintained a mission and a school, probably an offshoot of the old mission at Cross Village, north of Petoskey, known to the French as L'arbre Croche, the oldest settlement of continuous occupancy in the state of Michigan.

After the Indians moved to St. James, attracted by steady wages of the fishermen and availability of liquor, King Ben and his bearded tribe moved to the seclusion of High Island, first to exploit the remaining good timber there and then to enjoy the perfect safety of the island as a hide-away from snooping police officers.

Beset by repeated charges of immorality, King Ben finally disappeared early in 1923, and the Berrien county sheriff raided the House of David colony in Benton Harbor in search of the vanished leader. We recalled the year and this incident as we noticed, upon the walls of the High Island women's dormitory, a two-story structure, pages from an issue of the Chicago Herald and Examiner, a newspaper. The date on the yellowed pages was April 1, 1923.

We recalled, too, how a detachment of state police in 1926, en route to Benton Harbor, broke down the doors of the Diamond House at Benton Harbor and captured the missing king, garbed only in a nightcap and underwear, along with three women who were clad only in nightgowns.

The authenticity of these historic details is vouchsafed by the eminent Detroit historian, Dr. Milo M. Quaife.

Captain Allers, who was a young man on Beaver Island when King Ben frequently visited High Island, told us how one pretty wife protested against the king's rule that a bride must wait seven years to reside with her husband. She finally fled from High Island.

"The men at the settlement were suspicious of visitors," Captain Allers added. "They would not let us get out of their sight."

"Today, High Island is a deserted bit of land at the northern rim of Lake Michigan. The wood buildings are slowly decaying. Like King Ben, who died in 1927, High Island has had its day of glory."

GRAND JURY SIDELIGHT: Examination of Frank McKay before Judge Leland Carr is due to begin today—Thursday, July 5, as a result of the grand jury indictment. You may expect to hear soon of a campaign of vilification against Judge Carr and Special Prosecutor Kim Sigler, aimed indirectly at prospective jurors.

Lubricate Stoker

One of the most important things for a stoker owner to remember is that a stoker needs to be lubricated, just like an automobile, if it is to function at top efficiency. Because stokers are located in basements, submitted in many cases to the action of rust, moisture, to say nothing of floods in certain instances, stokers must be inspected, cleaned and lubricated at least once a year. This work should generally be performed by a dealer's serviceman who is properly trained and equipped.

The Altes Way
"Nature's Way"

Nature puts a husk around corn to keep flavor in...

... and everything harmful out. For the same reason Altes uses closed, instead of the ordinary open vats. Under this protective seal Altes Lager, like corn, ages in flavor and ripens to the full perfection of its exclusive Aged-in Sealed-in Flavor. No other beer can offer you so much.

Scouts on guard...

Recognizing the importance of street lights to the safety of busy Americans, the Boy Scouts in your community are on the lookout for broken and burned-out lamps. By reporting to the Edison Company or to the police, the scouts are calling our mobile patrols to the scene hours ahead of routine inspection. This is another example of the important services scouts are rendering in time of war—for street lights prevent crime and protect the movement of workers, troops and military supplies. Help your Boy Scouts in every way possible.
