WASHINGTON DIGEST ...

the people, for the power and the story of single nations.

WASHINGTON HAS SMALL TOWN AIR

Out of the doors of the still-unfinished cathedral which crowns Washington's highest hill, through the court in a gentle rain that sets the years to weeping and the young leaves of the privet shining in aqueous green, the solemn procession moved. The President and his entourage, the members of the Supreme court, the cabinet, the congress and the others slipped away as the family of Chief Justice Harlan Stone bore him gently to his last resting place in beautiful Rock Creek cemetery.

Another great American had chosen the nation's capital where he served for two decades, as his long, last home.

And I could not help thinking of something I have said before in these columns — Pennsylvania's avenue from the capitol grounds to the Potomac, and past the White House is only an extension of a thousand Main streets, which run through the "plaza," the "court house square," or the "commons," on past the First National bank and the opera house, the department store and the law crown parlor, to the free fields and woods beyond.

So much a part of America is America's capital city, and so the towns and cities clustered about their rivers, their main streets, their city halls, and post offices that when one long serves the nation here, it becomes a second home; often first in choice for his declining years and his last resting place.

I am sure that former President and Chief Justice William Howard Taft loved his native Ohio no less than the federal city; here the bridge upon which he could be seen taking his daily walk now bears his name; he lies in Arlington with our other soldier dead.

I know that retired Judge Hughes lacks no love or loyalty for the Empire state. Oliver Wendell Holmes, deeply rooted in New England as he was, lived here, and when he died, bequeathed his home to the nation. These are but three of many who chose to live here when their duties no longer made it necessary.

There is something about Washington, a city virtually without industries, or the other institutions which make a metropolis, that bears the mark of small-town America. Washington is the only capital of a great nation which is not that nation's metropolis.

There is also something else about this big little town which, for thousands of us who follow our humble ways here, makes us love it. My own parties are as dear to me as ever, and I never cease to thrill when I move across the border and over the flat black soil of Illinois; I have warm memories of the mist that blows in from the Pacific too; the hills and the lakelands of western New York; New England's green-crested mountains and rocky coast where I have been more than a transient guest.

War Department Announces Vacancies

The War Department recently made public the fact that there are vacancies in the second; third; fourth; fifth and sixth grades in the ground forces; air forces and service forces. These vacancies will be filled by veterans who have one or more of the 427 military skills listed in War Department Pamphlet No. 12-16, regardless of the number of months spent out of service.

If you spent more than six months in a military occupation and are physically fit for service in the new peace time army, your recruiting officer has an interesting proposition for you.

See your Recruiting Officer daily at 634 West Huron St., Pontiac, Michigan.

VETERANEWS

From the OFFICE OF VETERANS AFFAIRS LANSING

Like the average American GI this buck sergeant was no sentimentalist. In fact, the array of ribbons and battle stars on his blouse showed that he was pretty much a realist when it came to the unpleasant job of fighting and winning a war.

When he called at the Office of Veterans Affairs he was referred by the receptionist to a staff counselor. His problem, it developed, was not a personal one. He had read in the newspapers and heard over the radio something about food conservation, and that his government was planning to send food overseas.

Mentally reviewing the hardship he had undergone in four major combat actions, and the minimum amount and type of food he had to sustain him, he had little sympathy for the folks back home and their imaginary suffering because of food rationing.

He came to the OVA to register his plea, as coming from one who had seen at first hand the starving, hollow - cheeked, spindly-legged children of Europe, for statewide cooperation in the campaign of food conservation which would make it possible to send food to these pathetic children.

A sentimentalist? No he was just a typical American youth who had always been accustomed to seeing happy, well-fed children. His senses were shocked at the plight of the unfortunate youngsters of Europe. His heart went out to them. Nationality meant nothing to him. He instinctively knew that children were innocent irrespective of their place of birth — that loving care and kindness were necessary to their young lives — that food was essential — and lacking.

This veteran's plea for conservation of food at home in order to send this food thus saved to the helpless children of Europe is probably representative of the thinking of many veterans who served overseas. It merits our serious thought and should inspire our cooperation in the food conservation program. The fighting is over, but the war is far from won. Nor will it be won until hate, prejudice and selfishness are replaced by tolerance and generosity and by the practical realization that want and suffering always engender the next war.
