By GENE ALLEMAN

Lansing is still trying this week to catch its breath.

The ballot tornado which swept the Michigan Republican party, putting colorful Kim Sigler into the driver's seat, was not anticipated by the state administration. The primary election was in an off year. A light vote was expected. Every elective official at Lansing, from Governor Harry F. Kelly down, had gone on record openly and publicly endorsing their fellow colleague, Lieut. Governor Vernon J. Brown. In fact, their all out endorsement proved to be a handicap to Mr. Brown instead of a blessing, for it had all the resemblance of a "smashup" which selects the appointed.

Having gone out on the end of a limb, the governor's cabinet is now ereing the approaching state convention in Detroit. It is with nervous apprehension and wonderment. "What next?" is the question.

The Sigler victory can be interpreted in many ways, for political factors were numerous and varied. Frank Sparks, veteran editor of the Grand Rapids Herald, saw in the returns the fact that Brown had of an Administration in which there has been corruption in many of its departments.

Howard Nugent, speaker of the house who ran unsuccessfully for lieutenant governor, had a prediction of the voters' unrest. In a conversation with the writer of this column Nugent disclosed that he was gravely disturbed by the widespread impression, existing in the minds of voters everywhere, that conditions at Lansing were "rotten" and that a drastic clean-up was needed. During his travels Nugent questioned strangers with revealing results. "The average voter had never heard of Nugent," he suspected that many legislators were crooked.

Richard Coe, editor of the Hastings Banner which championed the Sigler cause, saw in the returns that "the average voter is pretty much of an independent" and hence resents what appears to be a machine attempt to put over one of its own members.

To quote: "The regular Republican party machine did every thing possible to defeat Mr. Sigler. In fact, the people of the state in the closing days of the campaign were treated to the unusual spectacle of high elective officials of the state doing a sort of 'trained set' act in favor of one candidate."

Coe warned, however, that Sigler has a "man-sized job to do to win the election" and will be fought by "many of the influential interests which opposed him in the primary."

Frank Morris, political writer of the Detroit Times, believed that Sigler received votes of many Democrats. To quote: "Having no close fight in their own ranks, a large percentage of Democrats obviously gave their support to Sigler." It is Morris' thesis that Democrats were attracted to Sigler because of his former allegiance to the Democratic party and because of his popular appeal for "clean and honest state government." Sigler in 1928 was the democratic nominee for attorney general. Morris said that Murray D. Van Wagoner, the Democratic nominee, "hopes the rancor in the administration machine will split the Republican vote in November and make it possible to break the 30-year rule that no Democrat can be elected in an off year."

The Exchange Club celebrated with a turkey dinner at its final formal meeting of the year on June 18. Thirty-six members and guests were present to hear Arthur Lamb make his report on his trip to the convention at Traverse City.

The Club was very sorry to hear of the death of the wife of Max Hult. Max has been vice-president and program chairman for the past six months.

Club members present elected unanimously the slate of officers as proposed by the nominating committee.

President, Vance Keeney. 1st vice-president, Harry Hunter. 2nd vice-president, Maurice Brown.

Secretary, Claude Goodes. Treasurer, Emory Hutton. Board of Control, James Marshall and Roy Carlson, to fill vacancy, Abe Johnson.

Arrangements have been made for the annual Club picnic on June 26, at Glen Oaks Golf Club.

There was no planned program at Farmington Kiwanis Club last Wednesday evening for it was "work night". The members came in their old clothes, with but one idea in mind — that of going forth and "bringing home the bacon" and the bacon, in this instance, was whatever people of the community wished to contribute for the Kiwanis Auction, held last Saturday.

The Kiwanians sincerely thank everyone who helped to make the auction a success. Final figures are not yet completed, but it is known that the underprivileged children will benefit considerably because of the auction.

The meeting of July 3 will be a round-table, due to the fact that the 14th of July is the day after the regular meeting date, and undoubtedly many Kiwanians will be out of town for the holiday.

Notice Of Meeting

The annual meeting of the North Farmington-Burial Ground Association and Ladies' Auxiliary will be held at the Chapel Tuesday afternoon, July 2, with pot luck supper. Everyone interested is cordially invited to attend. Rena Lamb, Secretary.
