New Weed Killer

Acts on Whole Plant—The new weed killer known as 2, 4-D differs from other chemicals used for the purpose in several ways. It belongs to the group of chemical substances that have come to be recognized in recent years as "plant growth regulating substances," according to Dr. John W. Mitchell of the department of agriculture. When sprayed on certain plants this chemical affects the whole plant rather than merely the parts sprayed as is true of some other weed killers. Finally, and of great practical importance, is the fact that it affects some groups of plants powerfully and has little effect on other groups.

The name 2, 4-D, is a popular abbreviation of the chemical term 2, 4-Dichlorophenoxyacetic acid. Chemicals such as chlorates, arsenates and sulfonamides have been used widely, particularly during the last 15 years, as effective herbicides of weed killers. They are very effective when properly used, but some studies the soil for a time—or in some cases indefinitely. Some are poisonous to animals and all are more or less expensive. Also they kill only those parts of the plant with which they come in contact. In contrast, 2, 4-D causes such abnormal development of some weeds that the whole plant, including the root, dies—even when the chemical is applied only to the top. It seems likely that 2, 4-D will be relatively inexpensive.

Another peculiarity is that 2, 4-D is selective in action. It seems to have little if any harmful effect on most grasses. Thus, it seems probable that this growth regulating substance will prove useful on lawns to kill such weeds as dandelion and plantain without destroying the grass in the lawn. Until further tests under way can be checked, the department of agriculture is being cautious in recommending the use of 2, 4-D in control of common farm weeds. But with the proper precautions, its use on lawns is recommended.

Batavia Thriving Dutch Port in East Indies—Batavia is expected to quickly resume its prewar position as capital and trade hub of the Netherlands Indies. Six degrees south of the equator, Batavia is in the same latitude as Natal, Brazil. Sixty miles westward is the Soenda Strait, approach to Batavia from the Indian ocean.

To Batavia, before the war, came cargo ships from all over the world, bringing imports of steel, cement, clothing and European luxuries. In return, tobacco, art work, bamboo, rice, sugar, spices and diamonds were loaded on a long list of exports.

Little Dutch harbor boats brought eager tourists who stared in wonder at saronged natives, and couldn't wait to go ashore and bargain in the markets.

Westerners found it a relief to pass from the hot, steamy lower town to the Dutch settlement in "Batavia Centrum." An atmosphere of cleanliness and thrift pervaded the bright-lit houses sitting in the midst of luxuriant gardens. Batavia had all the facilities of a modern city—gas, electricity, street cars, excellent railway and airline connections. Shops were excellent. Custom-tailored clothes were made almost at a moment's notice. Sitting cross-legged like industrious Buddhas, workers made fine leather articles, straw hats, and beautiful batik cloth for native turbans and sarongs and for export. Batik is a unique product of the Netherlands Indies, its designs worked out by an elaborate dying process.

Silk Culture—In parts of the United States where climatic conditions are favorable for silk culture, it has made little progress because of high labor costs and the time and care which are required. Recently, however, experiments in sericulture (silkworm growing) have been made in north central Texas and some cloth has been woven from silk produced by homegrown worms. Silk was considered so important as a future American industry, says the National Geographic society, that Virginia colonists in 1659 were penalized if they failed to plant at least 10 mulberry trees to every hundred acres of land they owned. First silk mill on the western continent was built in Mansfield, Conn., in 1810, but there was a decline of silk production all over the country when a blight destroyed nearly all American mulberry trees in 1844.

Safe Serving—Always boil canned vegetables from 5 to 10 minutes before serving. It is often tempting, upon opening a can of vegetables and finding them just the right texture, to shorten the boiling period. But this is dangerous, for botulism toxin, which is poisonous, may be present. Boiling will destroy this poison. Even when the vegetables have been canned with a pressure cooker, there is a chance the toxin may be present. Also, it's a risky habit to taste the top two or three peas, or the top string bean in the jar. Boil the contents first and taste afterwards. If the vegetables are to be used in a cold salad, it's advisable to boil them first and then let them cool. Don't take them directly from the jar. If after being boiled the food smells or tastes queer, don't risk using it.

So That's Where It Comes From!

The old story of how the white and black cow eats green grass and gives white milk is more or less amazing to Jane Sepull and Holly Spittler, children of Michigan State college GI veteran students. Living with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Sepull, Alpena and Mr. and Mrs. Garth H. Spittler, Hart, in the MSC campus trailer camp for married veterans, these two youngsters are close to the source of supply, as the college dairy farm is nearby. The Michigan dairy industry last year furnished full of milk—large employment to one out of every fifteen persons in the state. The year's income was well over $200,000,000.

Freight Loss—Freight loss and damage payments made by the railroads of the United States and Canada in 1944 totaled $59,756,338, an increase of 42.1 per cent over the preceding year. Claim payments by American railroads last year amounted to 0.82 per cent of the gross freight revenue as compared with 0.59 per cent in 1943. Those of Canadian roads were 0.39 per cent of the revenue, the same ratio as in 1943. For many years, the railroads have pressed against freight loss and damage. As a result of better methods of packing, loading and handling of shipments, freight claims paid in 1944 were only about half what they were in 1920, although the railroads performed nearly double the freight service that they did 25 years ago.

Tomato on Jimson Poisonous—Hope that it would be practical to fortify the tomato against root-knot disease by grafting it on the resistant root of its ill-smelling, poison-bearing relative, the Jimson weed, has gone glimmering—but not out. Scientists of the department of agriculture's research, administration, co-operating with the Alabama agricultural experiment station, find it is impossible to graft the tomato on the weed root, but the poisons formed in the root stream to the tomato fruits, making them unfit for the table and even dangerous.

CARD OF THANKS—I wish to thank my many friends and neighbors for their kindness and help at the time of my recent bereavement. Mrs. William G. Boelter. 39-1c
