Cross-Breeding of Dairy Stock Brings Questions
Cross-breeding of dairy cattle without a plan is to be frowned upon, but cross-breeding by using a suggestion of proved sires will bring productive results, says A. G. Baltzer, extension dairy specialist at Michigan State college.
Recent announcement of cross-breeding of dairy stock at the U.S. Department of Agriculture dairy farm at Beltsville, Md., has caused many questions regarding cross-breeding to reach Michigan State college dairy specialists.
Dairy stock of rich milk and percent test inheritance will bring productive results in cross-breeding, Baltzer explains. Dairy cows can be highly productive only if they have inherited the milking and butterfat producing factors and receive from their owner good feed and treatment.

client production as proved through records obtained from dairy herd improvement association," says Baltzer, concerning cross-breeding of dairy stock.
He points out this official inspection, the dairy farmer is able to build up the production quality in his herd because of proved sires. More than 95 per cent of all the dairy cows in Michigan are graded cows, Baltimore points out.
