The following letter was sent by a member who does not wish to be named.

"To Whom It May Concern: I have heard and read the phrase many times, 'Empty vessels make the most noise' and have seen it displayed at our last meeting by some members. If certain ones would try to build instead of destroy, our organization would be under way. Every organization has its heckler for a time. If these members know so much they should be president, and if they were, I don't think there would be any organization. I don't see where these members have contributed anything to the organization, and as members like these we would rather not have. I think I speak for the majority of the members. 'Have' mentioned no names, but if the shoe fits, wear it. A Member."

How do they do it?

Could you produce one-third more crops with 10% less manpower? The farmers of America did it during the last full year of the war.

How? Partly by working themselves and their machines longer, harder. Partly by assisting hired help with wired help.

Electricity has taken over more and more farm chores. It pumps water, grinds feed, cures hay, fills silos. It steps up milk and egg and pork production. It eases farm housework, too.

Cheap, dependable electricity has done more than any other force to make farming efficient and farm life comfortable.

Who electrified the farms? Rural electric service didn't happen overnight. It started more than 25 years ago—with America's business-managed electric companies. These companies did the pioneering—the pick-and-shovel work.

The advantages of electricity on the farm were many. The problem was to get it to the farmer. Distance and weather called for new methods and materials. New farm machines suitable for electric drive had to be developed.

Each problem was licked in turn by American initiative and ingenuity. Service grew steadily better and cheaper. Farm by farm, area by area, the web of wire expanded.

What of tomorrow? Today Detroit Edison serves 35,278 farms (about 95% of all farms in our territory and more than 100,000 other rural customers outside of incorporated towns. That's real progress.

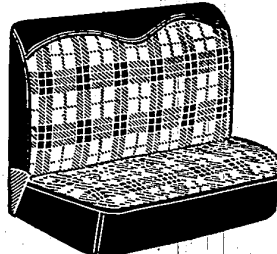

But the job isn't done. As fast as transformers, wire, poles and other critical materials become available we are extending reliable, low priced electric service. It is our goal to make this service available to every home, farm, business and industry at the earliest possible date.

For your listening pleasure tune in The Electric Hour every Sunday at 3:30 over WJR featuring Anne Jamison and Bob Stanley with Robert Ambruster and his orchestra.
