Like every observer, I was impressed by the Seminole attire. Not by the men's—they wear convenpressed by the Seminole attire. Not by the most—they wear conventional garments lightened by a gay handkerchief about the neck when they pursue their daily tasks, hunt on the reservation or loat in camp. They have shortened the long skirtlike garment (comparable to the woman's capp) to sport-shirt length.

The skirts are made of parallel bands of a brightly colored patchwork design which experts claim are real art. They are fashloned of hundreds of separate pieces of coloriul cloth, blended or contrasted to make a barbarically splendorous whole. The skirts bell out, widening in circumference as they approach the hem which, according to regulations must trail at least three inches or thereabouts on the ground.
