Center Offers Art Training

FARMINGTON Art has been one of the lifelines of the Farmington Community Center since first classes were held there and this spring will see the addition of three new artists to the teaching staff.

The additions are: Mrs. Mary Beard, collage; Miss Peggy Fleming, pen and ink line and design; and Rodney Landsman, acrylic and oil painting.

MRS. BEARD will introduce her own brand of collage in sessions that begin April 12.

Her unique style has been considered worthy of one-man shows in Florence, Italy; Sao Paulo, Brazil; and numerous art capitals of this country.

Mrs. Beard insists that under her guidance even the novice can produce unbelievable results. She uses, in addition to the traditional surface application of pictures, overlapping paper layers, colorful shapes, and almost limitless imaginative materials.

MISS FLEMING's pen and ink line and design course, completely new this spring, begins April 17.

COLLAGE UNLIMITED — Mary Beard, pastmaster of the collage technique, will teach a class on this medium in the Farmington Community Center beginning April 12. Her work has been shown throughout the U.S., Europe and South America.

Albertsen Is New Village President

FARMINGTON Alvin Albertsen was chosen village president of Wood Creek Farms when the council held its organizational meeting Monday.

Councilmen and officers elected in the March balloting were sworn in, and Albertsen was named as village president by the new council to replace William Smolek who resigned one week after the election.

Phil Wright was appointed to fill Albertsen's spot on the five-man council. Wright is one of the plaintiffs in a lawsuit pending in Oakland County Circuit Court against the village.

The village is presently prevented by court order, as a result of that lawsuit, from issuing a building permit allowing construction of a two-story office building on Outlot 10 on Northwestern Highway near Wellington.
