Harrowing Has Progressed
 The farmer of ancient and medieval times harrowed or pulverized the clods of earth stirred up by his plow by drawing bundles of tree branches over the field, thus smoothing the seed bed before planting.
 Later the branches were supplanted by o-x-drawn triangular wooden frames through which extended rows of pegs. Modern harrows are scientifically designed implements which break up the clods by means of steel teeth or by rows of steel discs. They accomplish in an hour the equivalent of days of hand harrowing. Under primitive cultivation methods, a man with a hoe labored long to remove weeds and stir the soil around his crops. The first horse-drawn cultivator, invented over 100 years ago, permitted the farmer to cultivate two acres in a day. With the modern tractor-drawn cultivator he can easily work from 30 to 65 acres of his land in a normal working day.
