CONSUMERS POWER APPROVES GIANT EXPANSION PLAN

A 1948 construction and system expansion program amounting to $40,691,000 has been approved by the board of directors of Consumers Power Company, D. E. Karn, vice-president and general manager, announced today. It is the largest one-year construction program in the company's history.

"Use of electricity and gas in the territory served by the company has been increasing rapidly," Mr. Karn said. "Expansion of our electric and gas systems has been restrained from keeping pace. For several years, wartime restrictions prevented expansion. Since then, construction work has been slowed by material shortages and other conditions. That means that our construction program during 1948 and each of the next few years must be much larger."

It is planned as a part of this 1948 program to invest a total of $17,830,000 in the construction, enlargement and improvement of power plants. Much of this money will go into the new B. C. Cobb Plant, now under construction in Muskegon. The Cobb Plant is scheduled to go into service in September. At first it will have two 60,000-kilowatt generating units. Construction work will continue at the plant, and late in 1948, another 60,000-kilowatt unit is scheduled to go into operation.

Also in the program is major construction work at the John C. Woodcock Plant at Essexville, near Bay City. A new 50,000-kilowatt unit at this plant will go into service in March, and construction work will continue, looking toward installation of two more 60,000-kilowatt units, the first of which is scheduled to go into service late in 1949, and the second early in 1950.

Expansion of the Bryce E. Morrow Plant at Kalamazoo will begin early in 1948, and a new 60,000-kilowatt unit will go into service, according to present plans, in July 1949.

"These seven new generating units—three at Cobb, three at Woodcock and one at Morrow—will increase our electric generating capacity more than 60 per cent," Mr. Karn said.

The program includes 1948 power supply projects amounting to $6,744,000. These projects involve construction of high voltage transmission lines and many substations. They are needed, Mr. Karn said, to facilitate the interchange of power between major population centers, to establish new power distribution centers and to serve large industrial customers.

To serve additional electric customers it is planned to extend and improve electric distribution lines throughout the 51-county area served by the company. The cost of these line extensions is estimated at $10,650,000. They will take electric service to about 20,000 additional customers living in cities and villages and to 6,370 additional customers in rural areas. It is expected that about 5,000 other rural customers, now living along existing distribution lines, will be connected in 1948.

Consumers already serves more than 90,000 farm customers—a larger number than any other company in America—and the 1948 program will bring the total to more than 100,000. The company operates 20,000 miles of rural distribution lines and will add 1,500 more in 1948.

Gas department projects, including many distribution system improvements and extensions in various areas, are estimated at $2,227,800. These do not include the storage field and transmission line projects of the Michigan Gas Storage Company, a subsidiary of Consumers, which is developing one of the country's largest storage field projects in Clare, Oscoda and Missaukee counties.

"This overall program," Mr. Karn said, "is a challenge both in providing the necessary funds and in completing it on time so as to take care of our customers' requirements."
