There are almost as many traditions surrounding weddings as there are June brides in any one year.

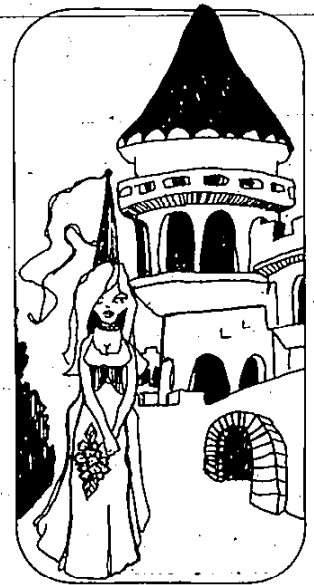

Probably the most traditional tradition is that the bride should wear "something old, something new, something borrowed and something blue." And old or young Aunt Minnie is sure to say "Happy is the bride the sun shines on."

Less known bits of folklore relate that if a husband climbs into bed first on his wedding night, he'll live longer than his wife. Also, the first one to fall asleep will be first to die.

Other pieces of information from "The Folklore of Weddings and Marriage" include the warning that it's bad luck to sleep in a new house or in their permanent home on the first night of the wedding.

For happiness, folklore recommends that the newlyweds sleep with their heads to the north. And to guarantee bliss, they should take a pound of limburger cheese, spread it between two towels and place it under their pillow on the wedding night.

That should keep away evil spirits, among other things!
