YOUR MARRIAGE ceremony will be over in a few minutes, the reception in a few hours, but the photographs of your wedding will last a lifetime. Your bridal portrait, wedding candids and newspaper clippings are keepsakes you'll treasure for years to come. Through them, you and your groom will be able to relive some of your happiest moments and share your precious memories with others.

YOUR BRIDAL PORTRAIT

Your most important wedding photograph is your formal portrait, for it's the one that will be published in the newspapers and prominently displayed in your new home. It's wise to keep both purposes in mind, so you'll still be proud of your portrait after it appears in the newspapers and sits on top of the piano for twenty years. Some backgrounds, lighting, hairstyles and makeup fail to pass the tests of time and newspaper reproduction.

Observer newspapers require that wedding photographs be submitted two to four weeks before the scheduled publication date, so it may be necessary to have your portrait taken as much as a month before your wedding day. If the proper facilities are available, you may arrange to have it taken at the bridal salon during the final fitting of your dress. Otherwise, it's best to go to your photographer's studio where you can be sure of having the right lighting, background, air conditioning and peaceful surroundings necessary for best results.

Your bridal portrait should look as if it was taken on your wedding day, so be sure you have all the proper accessories -- shoes, petticoats, gloves, jewelry, prayer book -- with you at the studio. Also take along a detailed description of your bridal bouquet so the photographer can provide an appropriate dummy for the photographs. Your hair and makeup should, of course, be at their best for your
