FARMINGTON, MICHIGANProposed Continuing Education Center at Michigan State College

Construction of a large Continuing Education Center at Michigan State College is scheduled to start April 1. The building, shown above in an architect's drawing, will provide accommodations for the college's extensive program of continuing educational services to the people of Michigan. Last year, special conferences and short courses, ranging in subject matter from sheep shearing to government workshops, brought more than 60,000 Michigan people to the East Lansing campus. In addition, the six-story construction will contain more than 100 guest rooms, 15 special conference rooms, and dining and large assembly facilities. The building will be financed by the W. E. Kellogg Foundation of Battle Creek and furnishings will be provided by the Michigan Hotel Association. The Center will be located on Michigan Avenue, at the northwest entrance to the campus.

HOME BUTCHERING
HINT STRESSES
SAFETY FACTORS

Home butchering is profitable on the farm and many rural people are now replenishing their lockers, jars and pantries.

But unless due caution is used, home butchering can be dangerous. George Amundson, agricultural engineer at Michigan State College, provides a few simple rules to reduce accidents.

One of the greatest causes of injuries is slippery footing. Ice should be removed from the spot where butchering is to be done, and ashes sprinkled on the ground. If the job is done indoors, sand, sawdust, or crushed rock salt will improve the footing. Keep fat and meat trimmings off the floor.

Equipment, too, should be used with care. All knives should be kept in a suitable place when not in use. Hoisting equipment should be checked. A tamper should be used to force meat into the grinder. Children should be kept away from butchering operations, the specialist concludes, and extreme care used with scalding water.
