WASHINGTON DIGEST
and trustworthy German publishers and editors to build an objective, free, democratic press in the U. S. Zone in Germany and to prevent the resurgence of Nazism, militarism, racism, pan-Germanism, or nationalism in the newspaper and news agency field.
The special report explains that the controls which were imposed when the papers were first established in order to conserve scarce materials, supplies, and equipment and in order to train editors, publishers and journalists in the tradition of democratic, free press have been progressively lifted so that for two years at least the U. S. Zone has had a "nearly" free press. The eventual goal has been from the start an absolutely free press to the extent that this condition obtains in the United States and Great Britain or other democratic countries.
What have been the results? In the view of the military government:
"Democratically-minded and trustworthy German editors and publishers have established a solid core of independent and democratic newspapers in the U. S. Zone of occupation. They have been encouraged to maintain their independence and objectivity against all attacks and to resist the encroachment of government or other special interest groups and protect their right to bring the news of Germany and the world to the people of Germany and to comment upon it."
The question that remains, however, is this: when the controls and the existing regulations are removed, will the Germans graduate from a "nearly free press" which the Americans have encouraged to a genuinely free press which Americans consider an essential of democracy? Will the Germans, for centuries have accepted control and regulation from above, be able to start out afresh and make use of the democratic techniques to which we have attempted to expose them?
That is one kind of "know-how" it is hard to pass on.

WINTER BLIZZARDS
The winter storms which attacked the range country and present what looked for awhile like a major blizzard to the cattle industry didn't turn out to be as bad as some people feared, but it might have been considerably worse if it hadn't been for what happened in the Pacific Islands in World War II. The Japs used to say that the American's most terrible weapon was the bull-dog and, of course, the Sea Bees wrote epic history on a clean slate.
The same might be said of the air force, so far as the snowbound ranchers, especially those in New Mexico, were concerned. There the hay-lift took them over the first, worst hump of the storms.
The Great Plains always have furnished hazards unknown to the parts of the North American continent.
As C. Warren Thornwalte, soil conservation expert of the department of agriculture says of the Great Plains: "In a desert, you know what to expect of the climate and plan accordingly. The same is true of humid regions. Men have been badly fooled by the semi-arid regions because they are sometimes humid, sometimes arid, and sometimes a cross between the two. Yet it is possible to make allowances for this too, once the climate is understood."
One of the worst blizzards in the winter storms was struck in the southwestern part of the area affected, southern Nevada and northern Arizona, where ordinarily there is all-winter frost. There are low altitude ranges there which make it unnecessary, under normal conditions, to provide winter feed. When these were cut off there just wasn't any feed available.
The early settlers who struck west were suspicious of the plains. They didn't realize that the game and the buffalo grass which covered those plains had provided plenty of sustenance for the millions of buffalo which roamed them unmolested, could resist drought as efficiently as it does. For miles there would be no water in sight to the men in the prairie schooners so they took for granted the land was not livable and pushed on to the coast. The grass as long as it was there—and the buffalo were good conservationists and didn't overgraze it—reduced the run-off after rains and prevented erosion. But the first adventurers had westward-borne written in their hearts anyhow, and they headed toward the coast.
Then came the farmers. The cattlemen were driven further west, the plow broke the plains and dug the dust bowl.
But agriculture is a closer-knit industry now and it had many means of assistance besides the army upon which to draw to help combat the recent blizzards.
