Youngsters Warned Of 22 Troubles

Spring fever that sends juveniles afield with 22 caliber rifles to shoot crows, foxes and illegal targets such as songbirds may get their parents into trouble.

Small boys afield after the winter's confinement, have been guilty of indiscriminate shooting in a number of cases. Few of them, roaming the countryside with a gun, realize that, just as in hunting season, they must have their license and be accompanied by parent or other qualified older person until they pass their seventeenth birthday.

Laws against trespass affect them just as strongly as in hunting season.

Conservation officers who find unaccompanied juveniles using firearms to shoot predators in a way to alarm suburban residents may hold the guns until the parents are interviewed. Older offenders may be prosecuted for careless use of hunting arms.

The fuselage volume of the Navy 190-passenger transport plan, Constitution, is larger than the largest pullman car, biggest box car, largest flat car and passenger bus combined.
